

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

PREFATORY NOTE

WE have been very much aided in what we may have been able to accomplish in the following biographical chapters, by the readiness to put at our disposal letters and papers remaining in the possession of members of the Sully family. Especially has this been so with Mrs. Albert Sully, the widow of Dr. Albert Sully (grandson of Thomas Sully) and now a resident of Brooklyn (N. Y.).

Miss Julia Sully of Richmond (Va.), a great-niece of the artist, has also shown much interest.

The descendants of Thomas Sully's step-daughter, Mary Chester Sully, who married John Neagle the distinguished portrait painter, have been very ready to assist us. They are residents of Philadelphia and possess some very charming family portraits from Sully's brush. In their parlor hangs the large painting by the Artist of his wife, with the pet dog of the family "Ponto" at her side.

To Dr. I. Minis Hays of the American Philosophical Society we are indebted not merely for official aid, but for very cordial support and valuable suggestions.

The Pennsylvania Historical Society through its executive staff has afforded us every facility during the progress of the work.

The Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts in the same way has been most ready to aid and forward our wishes.

To all of these we make our sincere acknowledgments.

BIRTH AND PARENTAGE—REMOVES TO CHARLESTON, S. C., WITH PARENTS—

M. BELZONS—PARTS FROM HIM—GOES TO RICHMOND, VA.—DEATH OF HIS BROTHER LAWRENCE—SULLY ASSUMES FRESH RESPONSIBILITIES—PAINTS HIS FIRST MINIATURE.

AT the mention of Thomas Sully's name the average reader will be apt to conjure up a mature if not an aged artist. No doubt the more familiar likenesses of Mr. Sully have helped to foster this impression. The portrait picturing him at the age of 73 is the familiar likeness, and the one he painted of himself when scarcely in middle life is rarely noted. But there was a young and vigorous Sully, full of buoyant determination and high ambitions; and in this biographical Memoir we shall attempt to bring him before our readers in a rejuvenated form.

The period of life lending itself best to special description is from the entrance of our embryo artist into the practice of his art, when about 16 or 17 years old, and for forty (40) years thereafter. This embraces Sully's two visits to Europe, that is, to England; for whatever advantages he might have gained from wider foreign study and observation, they were denied him. But young Sully made such good use of his opportunities at his very first English visit, that it is doubtful whether further travel would have contributed anything to his after-success as a portrait painter. He had the advantage of coming immediately under the direction and influence of Benjamin West, the "American patriarch of painting," who advised him to "study portraiture in England, above all schools."

West exhibited great interest in Sully, and writing to a friend in Philadelphia under date of Nov. 3rd, 1809, he expresses himself as follows :

"Philadelphia I cannot name without being interested in all that has a connection with that city ; this, my good Sir, alludes to a young gentleman now studying painting under my direction as a Professor of that Art, whose talents only want time to mature them to excellence, and I am apprehensive that his means of support are too slender to admit his stay at this seat of Arts that length of time to effect what I could wish, as I understand it is doubtful whether it cannot be longer than the beginning of next summer. . . . The young gentleman I allude to is Mr. Sully. I find him every way worthy and promising. I could not refrain from thus giving you my sentiments, when the success of Mr. Sully in his profession as a painter is so much to be desired."

We shall return to this highly significant period in Sully's career, but must needs turn back to an earlier date in order to give the events of his life in chronological order.

Our artist was of English parentage, the son of Matthew and Sarah Chester Sully, who were actors. They came to this country from England in 1792, bringing their family with them, and settling at Charleston, S. C. It was a numerous family, consisting as it did of four sons and five daughters. Thus in the order of their births, we name the sons, Lawrence, Matthew, Chester, and Thomas ; and the daughters, Harriet (married Prof. Porcher of S. C.), Elizabeth (m. Middleton Smith of Charleston, S. C.), Jane (m. J. B. LeRoy), Mary, and Sarah. Of the two latter, one married Mons. Belzons, a French refugee living at Charleston. Thomas, the subject of our memoir, was about 9 years of age when he reached this country, his birth having occurred in the month of June, 1783, at Horncastle, in Lincolnshire, England.*

* Mrs. Ravenel, in her book on Charleston, mistakenly names Sully as a Carolinian.

MEMOIRS OF THOMAS SULLY

Matthew Sully, the father, was brother-in-law to a Mr. West, then managing theatres in the south. Charleston was about to open a new theatre, and it was doubtless in view of that event that the Sullys were drawn to the southern town.

Charlestown, as it had always been called down to 1783, had now blossomed forth as the City of Charleston. Its growth was becoming marked, a number of causes contributing towards it. A Huguenot settlement had been early formed there, and so a French foundation existed which attracted later settlers of that nationality. At this particular juncture the dreadful upheaval at St. Domingo (1792) brought numerous French refugees, escaping the horrors of their devastated island homes. Being kindly received and welcomed by the Charleston people, they were afforded opportunities of earning livelihoods. They brought an atmosphere of gaiety and gallic vivacity to the life of the city, soon to be reflected in the diversions and amusements of the place. Music and dancing were made accessible, through the knowledge and teaching of the newcomers.

The new theatre evidently introduced a fresh and welcome diversion as may be gathered from the following quotation: "The opening of the theatre in January, 1793, was quite an event in the history of Charleston. Theatricals had been so long discontinued here that the rising generation were strangers to the fascination of the stage; and I can never forget the delight which this new amusement produced in all classes of our community. The box office was thronged of a morning; and in the evening of representation, the doors of the theatre were besieged by crowds long before the hour of opening them. The stage was the general subject of conversation; and so enchanting was its influence that the ladies were heard to say that they could live in the theatre!" So writes Fraser in his "Reminiscences of Charleston."

For theatrical people this promised well, but there was another branch of art for which our youthful Sully thirsted that had as yet but few votaries. No doubt young Thomas' parents, when placing him in business with an insurance broker, were influenced by prudential motives, and swayed doubtless by a feeling that artists are apt to have, that any occupation but their own is best for their offspring. The boy Sully was about 12 years of age when the parents decided on this step. An amusing anecdote has come down that the broker in question soon complained that although his youthful assistant was "very industrious in multiplying figures, they were figures of men and women, and that if the broker took up a piece of paper in the office he was sure to see a face staring at him!" In short, that "Tom spoiled all the paper that fell in his way, or that he could lay his hands on." The broker ended by advising Tom's father that "the boy should be made a painter."

Young Sully's artistic tastes had been kindled while at school. Charles Fraser, afterwards well known as a miniature painter, and somewhat older than our youthful artist, attended the same establishment and although then a mere beginner, Sully afterwards said "he was the first person that ever took the pains to instruct me in the rudiments of the art, and although himself a mere tyro, his kindness, and the progress made in consequence of it, determined the course of my future life."

Another influence also, was the fact that his own elder brother, Lawrence, was a miniature and device painter. The latter never attained any wide celebrity, but to the younger brother, with his inborn tastes, one so near and familiar to him engaged in such a pursuit must have proved a constant spur.

When young Sully parted from his insurance patron, it was at last determined to put him in the way of becoming a painter. Shortly before the period we are dealing with, a Mr. Belzons, a Frenchman, had married one of young Sully's sisters. Mr. Belzons had practiced art as an amateur abroad, and coming to Charleston had set up there as a miniature painter.* It was arranged that young Tom should take instructions from this gentleman, who had by marriage become his brother-in-law.

* In the Charleston Directory for the year 1797 appears "Mons. Belzons, Miniature Painter, 28 Church St."

MEMOIRS OF THOMAS SULLY

There is nothing to show that Mr. Belzons' abilities were in any way extraordinary, no doubt indeed very moderate. But what does seem well-established is that he did not possess the patience requisite for the rôle of a teacher. So it was not long after, following a violent scene, in which the brother-in-law's temper appears to have been much at fault, that the relations of pupil and instructor were abruptly ended. This came about, when Sully was 16 years of age (1799). It was a serious crisis in the youth's outlook in life. His parents were no longer living, his elder brother Lawrence had removed to Richmond, Va., and worse still, he was without means. The story goes that after the rupture at Belzons', his late pupil spent the first night in a public refuge, so determined was he not to seek a reconciliation. The next day, meeting a friend, he related what had occurred and asserted his determination not to return to his brother-in-law's house. The friend sympathized in these feelings, and better still was able to offer him some temporary protection. Then Mr. Read, a Navy agent, became interested in the youth's difficulties, and offered his interest to procure a midshipman's berth for him. The offer was accepted, and our future painter came near becoming a sailor. But fortunately for the cause of art, his brother Lawrence got into communication with him and proposed that he should come to Richmond and become his pupil. Some difficulties were experienced in arranging for transportation to Richmond, but happily these were overcome through the liberality of a sea-captain, who carried young Sully to Norfolk in his own ship. Here he tarried a few days at Capt. Leffingwell's house until his brother remitted funds, with which he was enabled to discharge his debt to the captain and pay for a passage on the James River to Richmond.

His brother Lawrence, at this time a man of some 30 years of age, and in whose house he now came to live, had some years previously married Sarah Annis, of Annapolis, Md. Two children had been born of the marriage, and the birth of a third daughter, still further increased the family, in the following year. With this considerable household the two brothers later determined to remove to Norfolk. Here it was, on May 10th, 1801, that young Thomas Sully painted his first miniature from life, being a likeness of his brother Chester Sully.

That invaluable "Account of Pictures", for so he himself styles it rather than a "Register," and which Sully so sedulously kept, was begun at this time, and the first entry in its pages is one describing the miniature just mentioned. It is interesting to follow the entries throughout the book, but a peculiar halo seems to hover over these opening pages. They appear to foreshadow the success that was to follow, and to be eloquent of a steady tenacity of purpose. The youthful Sully evidently feels that he has entered upon his rightful career. It is to be no haphazard adventure, but a steady and increasing employment. He rules his book in columns, enters first the date at which any likeness is begun, followed by the size of the picture, then the sitter's name with perhaps some explanatory note attached, and finally the price or value of the portrait, and the date of its completion. These succeeding entries, carried through each year, form a most illuminating commentary on the growth of Sully's powers, and the favor with which the efforts of his brush became increasingly rewarded.

CHAPTER II

"FIRST ATTEMPT IN OIL COLORS"—MEETING WITH THOMAS ABTHORPE COOPER—REMOVES TO NEW YORK CITY—PAINTS NUMEROUS PORTRAITS OF DRAMATIC PEOPLE—VISITS GILBERT STUART IN BOSTON—REMOVES TO PHILADELPHIA—SAILS FOR ENGLAND.

ADDRESSING ourselves, therefore, to these records, we find that in 1801 he painted "10 pieces," valued at $180. The year that followed was meagre of results, but Sully signalized its passage by his "first attempt in oil colors," painting a small portrait of William Armistead.

1803 proved a much better year in the amount of work produced, but an event followed towards its close that was to bring with it grave and unlooked-for responsibilities. This was the death of his brother Lawrence. (The latter had moved back to Richmond with his family, and Thomas had followed him there.) This unexpected calamity, instead of overwhelming and stifling young Sully's art ambitions, appears only to have moved him to greater effort. Now he displayed that steady fortitude which distinguished him in after life, for without a moment's hesitation he at once undertook the support of his brother's orphaned children and their mother. Here we may anticipate our story by relating that some two years following this event, Thomas married the widow. She was some four years his senior, but the union turned out a most happy one. No fewer than nine children were the issue of this marriage, and the ties uniting the children of Lawrence and those of his brother Thomas appear to have been of the closest and most affectionate nature. Sully's domestic life was distinguished by all that nice regard for the duties and responsibilities of parenthood that are sometimes lacking in those "married to Art." His life was well ordered and benevolent, thoughtful and considerate in its relations with all men; and we shall find this bearing fruit in the esteem in which he was held in his lifetime, as well as the affectionate regard paid his memory.

Just previous to his brother Lawrence's death our youthful artist, ever seeking for means of improvement, had planned to go abroad with a view of study. Of course this had to be abandoned; but fortunately he was enabled to carry out the project a few years later, as we shall discover in the course of our story.

Sully's exertions during the next two years produced only moderate gains; thus in 1805 he notes having painted "30 pieces", valued at $680, while in 1806 the number, estimated at only 18, brings rewards amounting to $527.

It was in the month of November of this year that he removed to New York City. Its coming about was the result of a meeting with Thomas Abthorpe Cooper, the distinguished English actor, then on a theatrical tour of the South, and stopping for a while at Richmond. Dunlap,* when recounting their meeting, merely states that Cooper, sitting to Sully for his portrait, formed a friendship for the painter, etc., etc.; but the tradition preserved among the descendants of the English actor is that Cooper, learning of young Sully's tribulations, sought him out, and, after sitting to him for his portrait, advised and encouraged him to seek a wider and more promising field. It is entirely probable that this is the true story, for to a generously disposed man, as Cooper appears among his contemporaries, knowledge that a young fellow-countryman of talent was in difficulties through lack of patronage, would be likely to prompt him in seeking him out, as he is reported to have done. At any rate, the fact is indisputable that it was Cooper who advised and planned for Sully's removal to New York, and this with Cooper's assistance, was carried out a few months following the Richmond meeting. It proved a turning-point in Sully's career; Cooper at once introduced him to members of his own profession, and the entries in Sully's "Account of Pictures" attest that his new friend and patron gave practical expression to his generous feelings. In November, Sully records having painted John Harwood, of New York Theatre, "for Cooper," and Mrs. Twaits of New York Theatre, "for Cooper"; in December Mrs. Darley of New York Theatre, "for Cooper." Later followed portraits of Mr. Darley, "for Cooper." Also Mrs. Villars, in the character of Lady Macbeth, and Mrs. Warren, of the Philadelphia Theatre; evidencing that the painter's introduction to the actor and his circle carried with it substantial benefit.

In fact, at the end of 1807, our artist, now 24 years of age, is able to count "pieces" painted to the number of 70, and his receipts at $3,203 (!)

But, as there is no bright light that has not its corresponding shadow, we find entered also, "The Embargo was put in force at the close of this year, 1807; which greatly injured my prospects." It was in this same year, 1807, that our newly launched Sully first had an opportunity of meeting Gilbert Stuart, then at the height of his fame, and settled in Boston.

Armed with a letter of introduction from Cooper to Mr. Andrew Allen, of Boston, he visited that city, and through the latter was introduced to Stuart. It happened very fortunately that at the very time of Sully's advent Allen was fulfilling an engagement to sit to Stuart for his own portrait. They went together, therefore, to Stuart's studio, and Sully, when describing the meeting and his experience, relates: "I had the privilege of standing by the artist's chair during the sitting, a situation I valued more at that moment than I shall ever again appreciate any station on earth" (!) Then a still happier circumstance occurred, for while lingering in the painting room there entered there Isaac P. Davis, a well-known and liberal Bostonian, and an attached friend of Gilbert Stuart's. Following mutual introductions, an arrangement was made that Mr. Davis should sit to Sully, and that Stuart would pass upon the portrait when finished, with a view of giving helpful criticism. We can readily enter into Sully's feelings when, having finished the picture, he carried it to Stuart. We had best quote his own description of what occurred.

"He looked at it for a long time, and every moment of procrastination added to my torment. He deliberated and I trembled. At length, he said, 'keep what you have got, and get as much as you can.' (!) Of course, the "keep what you have got" must have fallen like a benediction upon Sully's ears. Coming from Stuart, it meant everything. The latter followed up his favorable criticism by added encouragement, and communicated to Sully his own arrangement of colors when painting, and the manner he had of using them. He offered advice and recounted his own experience. It is small wonder that Sully retained to the end of his career a warm admiration of Stuart's genius. In some recollections that he jotted down in 1869, and but three years preceding his own death, he takes occasion to vindicate Stuart's memory against certain charges circulated, touching his personal habits.*

Following his Boston visit, and at the instance of his friend Mr. Benjamin Chew Wilcocks, Sully determined to take up his residence in Philadelphia. We can approximate the time through a portrait painted of Mr. Wilcocks' sister, which he began on December 9, 1807.† This

* Sully expressed himself to the following effect: "He (Stuart) has been called a man who drank too much, but I never saw him the least disguised by liquor. I have been with him in company, but never witnessed the slightest impropriety." (Recollections of an Old Painter. Hours at Home, Vol. X.)

† He did not settle in Philadelphia until the following year (1808), painting the portrait of Miss Wilcocks at his first visit. When coming to Philadelphia from New York at this time he bore the following letter addressed to Miss Rebecca Gratz by his friend Washington Irving:

"I hardly need introduce the bearer, Mr. Sully to you, as I trust you recollect him perfectly. He purposes passing the winter in your city, and as he will be 'a mere stranger and sojourner in the land,' I would solicit for him your good graces. He is a gentleman for whom I have a great regard, not merely on account of his professional abilities, which painting has the distinction of being the first portrait coming from Sully's brush in the opening of his new career in Philadelphia. It was to be followed, as we know, by a succession of portraits, the list of which alone indicates the immense vogue that he gained, and the growing demand, that the features of Philadelphia's loveliest women, and her most distinguished men, should be perpetuated by Thomas Sully's pencil.

Sully was now receiving what in these days seems an almost ludicrously small sum for the work he was doing. Fifty dollars was his regular price for a bust portrait. When the size ran somewhat larger, approaching a half-length, $80 was paid him. Of course he was still a very young man, only now about entering his twenty-fifth year. But as one looks at these early pictures one cannot help envying the fortunate recipients of so much enduring art. After the lapse of more than a hundred years, and in spite of the famous names in portraiture that have emerged in that period of time, they continue, in the opinion of connoisseurs, to rank as among the loveliest counterfeit presentments, to be found either in this country or abroad.

The injury to his art prospects by the Embargo Act, which our readers will recall Sully's allusion to at the close of 1807, necessitated some sacrifice, on his part, and we find him, at the opening of 1808, engaging to paint portraits for a list of subscribers at the reduced price of $30 to each sitter. His friends interested themselves in this plan, and Sully's written records show that he painted the portraits of at least 26 sitters on these terms, a "Dr. E. Griffiths" heading the list of those who sat to him in the series of what in the language of the day will be termed "thrift" portraits.

are highly promising, but for his amiable character and engaging manners. I think I cannot render him a favour for which he ought to be more grateful than in introducing him to the notice of yourself and your connections. . . . Excuse the liberty I have taken, and believe me with the warmest friendship.

Ever yours,

WASHINGTON IRVING.

NEW YORK, NOV. 4TH, 1807.

MEMOIRS OF THOMAS SULLY

A yearning for opportunities of greater improvement had again set it, and in this year Sully looks about for means to visit England, where in London, he feels sure, the surroundings he seeks will not be lacking. It was at this juncture that his Philadelphia friend and patron, Mr. Benjamin Chew Wilcocks, came especially to his aid. This gentleman going about among his intimates secured the adhesion of six sympathizing friends, who with himself agreed to subscribe $200 each towards the proposed journey, and fortunately on terms which enabled Sully to accept of the offer, seeing that he could honorably discharge the debt.

In repayment, it was agreed that Sully should furnish each of the subscribers with a copy of some master, to be painted while in London and shipped at his own expense to Philadelphia. This entire transaction shows Sully in a most favorable light. He might have been very well content to forego all such extraordinary effort. He was, with the powers already at his command, in a position where he could in normal times, feel sure of employment, and, with a reputation that, to one less spurred by the highest ambition, might have seemed sufficient. It is likewise evidence of the regard felt for his capacities, that these gentlemen were willing to encourage him in his more ambitious plans.

It was no light task, however, that he undertook, and when mentioning this period of his life to a friend, his comment was, "I will not dwell upon the slavery I went through nor the close economy used, to enable me to fulfill my engagement; but although habitually industrious, I never passed nine months of such incessant application." This alludes to his experiences in London of which we shall speak in the next chapter.

On the 17th day of May, 1809, by a decree of the Court of Common Pleas of Philadelphia, Thomas Sully was admitted to American citizenship, and in anticipation of his voyage abroad he secured a government passport, bearing date June 3, 1809. On the 10th of June he set sail from the Delaware, and after a voyage just short of five weeks, landed in Liverpool on July 13th (1809).

CHAPTER III

MEETS BENJAMIN WEST IN LONDON—FORMS A FRIENDSHIP WITH THE ARTIST
C. B. KING—STUDIES UNDER SIR THOMAS LAWRENCE—KINDNESS OF WEST—EXECUTES COPIES OF CELEBRATED MASTERS—SAILS FOR HOME.

SULLY'S alacrity in settling to his task is clearly proven, when we find him in less than two weeks' time setting up his easel in London. He had taken the precaution of arming himself with a number of letters of introduction. To Benjamin West he bore a letter from Mr. Wm. Rawle, of Philadelphia. His experience with the veteran American painter in London, was to prove very much the same as when coming under Gilbert Stuart in Boston. At their very first interview, West remarked, "I can't teach you until I know what you can do. Paint a head and show it to me." So we find, by an entry in Sully's "Register," that already on July 25th he has painted a likeness "Head-size" of his friend and fellow-artist, Charles B. King, "as a specimen to show West." West appears to have detected an indecision on Sully's part in expressing the anatomy of the head, betraying some lack of knowledge of the internal structure. He therefore advised the young painter to study osteology assiduously. Sully was not slow in acting on this valuable advice, and there can be little doubt that his having followed it, played an important part in the marked development shown at the end of his English visit, and when renewing his portrait painting in Philadelphia. His method of study in London was to copy anatomical engravings at night; in addition to which he and his friend King studied from a model hired to stand in their painting room.

Charles B. King, the artist just mentioned, and to whom Sully became greatly attached, was the first person whom Sully had sought out after his arrival in London. King had already been in London some years, and was therefore familiar with art affairs in the English capital, such knowledge proving of great use to Sully. These kindred spirits at once discovered an interchange of sympathy, and therefore agreed to share an apartment between them, and occupy a painting-room together. Long after, Sully, when referring to this episode, remarked, "I resided under the same roof with him (King) and our painting-room was in common during my stay in London; an intimacy of twenty years enables me to testify to qualities of heart and correctness of conduct rarely equalled for purity or usefulness." *

West had by this time abandoned portrait painting. He had proved himself a very good portrait painter, but apparently historical composition was the form in which he preferred to express himself; and which he conceived stood upon a higher plane than the other. This is brought out very clearly in a letter addressed to Charles Willson Peale at very nearly the same time we are describing. The elder Peale's son Rembrandt was about embarking for France to study painting, and collect the portraits of eminent men. After expressions of kindly interest, West writes: "Although I am friendly to portraying eminent men, I am not friendly to the indiscriminate waste of genius (!) in portrait painting";† he then goes on to lay particular stress on the young man's approaching opportunity for the study of classical examples in Paris, and to urge his taking advantage of it. He was equally outspoken with Sully, and after re-

* This estimable man was a native of Newport, and passed his summers there and his winters in Washington. During a period of forty years his studio at the Capital was filled with the portraits of the political and other celebrities of the day,—not remarkable for artistic superiority, but often curious and valuable as likenesses, especially the Indian portraits. His industry and simple habits enabled him to acquire a handsome competence, and his amiable and exemplary character won him many friends. He died at Washington, D. C., March 18, 1862, at the age of seventy-six. (Henry T. Tuckerman, "Book of the Artists.") marking that he did not paint portraits himself any longer, told him to go about and see what portraits he liked best. From what followed it seems certain that the paintings of Sir Thomas Lawrence particularly attracted Sully. He made this distinguished artist's acquaintance, and was highly pleased at the reception accorded him. His own account gives some interesting details of the interview, and mentions the particular source from which he had secured a letter of introduction. We shall therefore quote Sully's own words :

"A miniature painter named Miles, who used to be in the employ of the Emperor Paul of Russia, upon Paul's death came to America and taught drawing. He gave me a letter (letters?) to a number of painters, among whom was Sir Thomas Lawrence. He received me very warmly on Miles' account, but was too much of a gentleman not to add, 'and on your own also.' So when West said to me, 'I don't paint portraits myself, go about and see whose portraits you like best,' I availed myself of Lawrence's instruction. . . . Lawrence was one of the most finished gentlemen I ever met. . . . He made a good deal of money, but was too generous to grow rich, for if a beggar asked him for five pounds he would give him fifty (!)."

Sir Thomas Lawrence was a great friend of the Kembles, and there are pleasant accounts of that intimacy to be found in Fanny Kemble's "Record of a Girlhood." * Sully himself was later to come into most amicable relations with the spirited author of those biographical Records. She came to the United States in 1832 with her father, Charles Kemble. Sully's portraits of her made at the time of this visit are charming examples. He painted the much fêted and admired young actress in a number of the characters that she assumed on the stage, as "Beatrice," "Bianca," "Juliet," etc., as well as portraying her in the likeness of her natural self. The portrait of her in Shakespeare's "Beatrice" and which hangs at the Academy of Fine Arts in Philadelphia is probably the most effective of those he painted of her in character. It is the one that Fanny Kemble herself expressed a preference for.

Sully has sometimes been called the "Sir Thomas Lawrence of America" and it is not to be denied that there are enough points of resemblance between the two to suggest such a comparison. The English artist, while painting a goodly number of masculine portraits, and in many instances with marked success, was undoubtedly at his best when portraying the galaxy of lovely women distinguished both by birth and beauty that flocked to his easel during the height of his success.

Sully, in the same way, has no small number of effective portraits of men to his credit. They comprise the likenesses of distinguished soldiers, statesmen, actors and literati, prominent in their day and generation, and many of these portraits are extremely impressive. But his forte lay in delineating the softness and charm of female character.

It may be objected by some of Sully's many admirers that the linking of his name in a comparison with that of Lawrence is not the meed of praise they would seek to have bestowed. Since Lawrence's death, or rather following close upon it, it has been the fashion to detract from his living reputation as a painter. Mrs. Kemble touches upon it in her "Recollections," and while admitting that "of his merit as a painter an unduly favorable estimate was taken during his life," concludes that "since his death his reputation has suffered an undue depreciation." She then goes on to speak in admiration of "his lovely head of Mrs. Nugent, the splendid one of Lady Habberton, and the noble picture of my grandmother" (Mrs. Siddons). Among the male portraits she prefers his likeness of Canning, the portrait of Lord Aberdeen, and of her uncle, John Kemble.

In estimating Lawrence's art, it should be remembered that he succeeded a school of portraiture that perhaps has never been excelled. To tread upon the heels of Gainsborough, Reynolds and Romney, paint con-temporaneously with such masters as Raeburn and Hoppner, and yet establish the high reputation that Sir Thomas did, is distinction in itself.

Benjamin West thought highly of Lawrence's art. To a friend who expressed regret that Sir Thomas did not more often employ his time in works similar to his celebrated "Satan" and "less to portraiture", West replied, "Do not confound his pictures with mere portraits; painted as his are they cease to be portraits in the ordinary sense; they rise to the dignity of history . . . his reputation must last as long as the arts shall be valued by mankind." *

Both the English and the American artist felt tenderness toward children and in the happy delineation of childhood Lawrence was thought to excel. Can any question exist as to Thomas Sully's charming accomplishment in the same field? The sprightly smiling faces that he painted with so much tender grace are the very embodiment of innocence and happy childhood. Fortunate indeed are possessors of such canvasses from Sully's brush.

Some idea of the immense zeal shown, and the self-denial practiced by our student while in his English surroundings may be gathered from the following anecdote. It is related that at his first interview with C. B. King, the artist, in London, the latter inquired as to his proposed length of stay, and as to how much money he had brought for the purpose. When Sully answered, "Four hundred dollars," King replied, "Why, my good sir, that is not enough for three months! I'll tell you what. I am not ready to go home, my funds are almost expended, and before I saw you I had been conning a plan to spin them out and give me more time. Can you live low?" "All I want is bread and water," replied Sully. "Oh! then you may live luxuriously, for we will add potatoes and milk to it. It will do! We will live in these rooms, they will serve us both. We will buy a stock of potatoes, take in bread and milk daily, and . . . work away like merry fellows." And this they decided bravely to do, and as it turned out, with happy results.

* Judging by the prices paid now for Lawrence's pictures, West's estimate and prediction are both being realized. His portrait of Miss Farren, afterwards Countess of Derby (in a white silk dress lined with fur), sold at Christie's in London in 1897 for 2415 guineas.

It was through Benjamin West's thoughtfulness that Sully was put in the way of beginning almost immediately, the execution of the copies promised his friends and patrons in Philadelphia. He soon discovered that while permission to view private collections of paintings in England might be forthcoming, no opportunity would be granted for copying any of the pictures. He then considered the advisability of going to France, where he was told a more liberal spirit prevailed. Before making a decision, however, he thought it well to take Mr. West into his confidence, and it was well that he did so. West showed the greatest sympathy, and is reported to have spoken as follows :

"I understand that your object on your return is portrait painting ; then stay in England. You wish to fulfill an engagement and improve yourself by copying some pictures. My collection, old and new, is at your service. There are specimens of the ancient masters and of the moderns. Take them as you want them, and come to me for my advice when you want it."

How nobly the old painter lives up to his reputation of benignity and generosity ! By "take them" West actually authorized Sully to carry the picture he might be copying to his own painting room,—an immense advantage, both facilitating and expediting the work he was so anxious to accomplish. After such an experience, it seems but natural that the first picture Sully should undertake to copy would be one from his benefactor's brush. He chose the latter's painting taken from the story of "Pylades and Orestes." This is said to have been Benjamin West's first venture in the special field of composition he had marked out for himself. The picture had attracted much attention and was finally purchased by Sir George Beaumont, who included it in a gift of pictures to the British Government. Dunlap, in 1834, when describing the picture, notes that "there is an admirable copy of it in this country (U. S. A.), painted by Mr. Sully." *

His second work was the "Holy Family" after Correggio, begun in September and finished in October. Then followed a picture which is now in Philadelphia, Raphael's "Madonna della Sedia." It was begun and completed in the month of December. This charmingly executed copy is in the possession of Mrs. Alex. D. Campbell, a daughter of Mr. Benj. Chew Wilcocks, for whom it was painted. This lady is fortunate in the possession of a fair-sized gallery of Thomas Sully's works, which from their variety and excellence form a most attractive collection.

Our untiring artist followed up his Madonna with a copy of Sir Joshua Reynolds' "Holy Family." This was a large canvas, as was the succeeding one, "Telemachus in the Island of Calypso," † after Benjamin West. These last two works were begun in January (1810) but not completed until March 1st and 2nd respectively, or about a week before Sully's sailing from England on his return voyage to America.

He had also executed some half-dozen landscapes on an order from a gentleman in Philadelphia, ‡ so that he had kept his promise for the classical copies, and painted these works in addition.

Sully had been abroad nine months; that is, allowing for the voyage over, he had been able to devote something like eight months to the prosecution of his plan for study and improvement. The reader, we hope, from our recital, will have been able to measure the spirit of ardor and devotion shown. It may be recalled that following the young student's arrival he very soon discovered that the means at his command would not permit of a longer stay than the period just coming to a close. West's letter, already quoted and written to a friend in Philadelphia, foreshadowed the financial difficulties in the way. These obstacles seem only to have had the effect of rousing all Sully's faculties and of filling him with a determination to make even the short period of probation fulfill the expectations of his friends.

Happily we shall find that in none of these hopes were they to be disappointed. He exhibited a marked advance in his art at his return, and the portraits painted in the years that immediately followed, placed him in the very front rank of living portraitists. It was on the 10th of March (1810) that he set sail for home, and he so noted it in his Records. Under what different conditions shall we find him revisiting England when in middle life, to paint his well-known portrait of Queen Victoria in her coronation robes !

CHAPTER IV

BACK IN PHILADELPHIA—PAINTS FIRST FULL-LENGTH PORTRAIT—LIKENESS OF GEORGE FREDERICK COOK IN RÔLE OF RICHARD III—COMMODORE DECATUR'S PORTRAIT—SULLY'S KINDNESS TO YOUNG C. R. LESLIE—PAINTS "WASHINGTON CROSSING THE DELAWARE."

TRADITION has it that on Sully's return to Philadelphia he occupied a house jointly with Benjamin Trott, the justly celebrated miniature painter. Doubtless they were intimate, but careful examination fails to discover proof of this reported arrangement.

Sully, before going abroad in 1809, was established at "162 Mulberry Street," afterwards renamed "Arch Street." Following the old numbering on Chestnut Street, this would place his dwelling at 5th and Arch Streets. In that same year (1809) and in the following year (~~1810~~) (1810) Trott's address appears in the Directory as at the "Corner of 6th and Minor Streets." Sully's address in the last mentioned year is quoted as at "56 South 11th Street." It was doubtless therefore at the latter domicile that we find him resuming his brush, on April 24th, 1810, and painting the bust of a Mr. Dalmatia. He is careful to note that "It is the first on my return to Philadelphia." A month or two later he paints a portrait of Mrs. Dalmatia. (Just who these sitters were we have not discovered.) To Mr. Dalmatia succeeds "Mr. Dwyer, Comedian," showing that the dramatic profession had not forgotten Cooper's earlier protégé. Dwyer was an Irishman, enjoying considerable celebrity, and we find him noted in Wm. B. Wood's "Recollections of the Stage," where he speaks of him as being "much admired."

Then follows a portrait of E. Hudson (Dentist). The latter was an Irishman by birth also, and coming to Philadelphia in 1805, ultimately rose to prominence in his profession. James Gardette was the only dentist of note in the city at that period, so that the field was open to a man of ability, which Hudson soon proved himself to be. The portrait reveals a spirited figure, the countenance bespeaking alertness and force. It would make a good companion picture to the well-known likeness of Dr. Thomas Parke that hangs at the Library Company of Philadelphia, and which Sully painted 12 years later. Dr. Hudson's portrait remains in the possession of a lady descendant, connected through marriage, and residing at Burlington, N. J.

Sully now feels sufficient confidence in his powers to undertake the painting of a whole-length figure. His sitter for this portrait is Wm. B. Wood, the popular actor-manager, in the character of "Charles de Moor," from Schiller's celebrated play of "The Robbers." This painting is in Philadelphia, and we have had recent opportunity for examining it. The scene depicted is the Camp of the Robbers at sunrise. In the foreground is seen the half-recumbent figure of Von Moor, the bandit chief, surrounded by three or four of his satellites, to whom their leader is evidently giving commands. Pistols are at his belt, and the turbaned banditti gathered about him appear intent upon his orders. The coloring is excellent, and the entire composition well carried out.

This play of Schiller's entitled "Die Räuber," was written when its author was but 19 years of age. It had great success in the dramatist's native land, and found favor in other countries in translated form. Here in Philadelphia, in its English translation, it became a favorite play, and was frequently performed.

The dramatic portrait just described was soon to be followed by another, that attracted greater attention, and is still cited with high approval whenever Sully's powers as a portrait painter are under review. This was the likeness, life-size, of George Frederick Cooke in the rôle of Richard III. The coming of this English actor to our shores was an event in theatrical annals, and many anecdotes of his genius, as well as of his eccentricities, have been preserved. While playing many parts, Sir Pertinax in "The Man of the World," being accounted one of his best, among his Shakespearian rôles the character of Richard appears to have found most favor. He had played it abroad with success, and he made his American début in the part. In performing it, as far as costume was concerned, he never resorted to the usual practice of wearing an artificial "mountain on my back," nor "legs of an unequal size," although these personal points are so strongly marked in the text. Wm. B. Wood, in his "Recollections," when discussing the matter, remarks that "his uniform costume while acting in our theatres, is preserved in Sully's fine picture now in the Academy of Fine Arts at Philadelphia." He refers again to the portrait when writing of Cooke's demise in the following year. "The greatest event at this time connected with the Drama . . . was the death of George Frederick Cooke, who died in the City of New York. A special tribute to his extraordinary dramatic genius was considered to be due him. The stage was arrayed in mourning; and the fine full-length portrait of him by Mr. Sully was exhibited."

Some time previously we find Washington Irving writing from Philadelphia to his friend Henry Brevoort in New York about the picture. "Sully has finished a very fine and careful portrait of Cooke, and has begun a full-length picture of him in the character of Richard. This he is to receive $300 for, from the gentlemen of Philadelphia who opened a subscription for the purpose which was filled up in an hour."

Sully has left on record his meeting with Cooke and the impression made upon him by his acting: "I painted Cooke the actor about two weeks after he came to Philadelphia. I made 3 pictures of him—a full-length in the character of Richard III, now in the Philadelphia Academy; one dressed as a gentleman, owned by Mr. Edwin Forrest, and a head which I learn has recently been sold in New York. He was a bon-vivant and a wonderful actor. When I first saw him act in Philadelphia it was very difficult to get into the house. In the first scenes I was disappointed, but as the play advanced I grew enthusiastic. Mr. Benjamin

MEMOIRS OF THOMAS SULLY

Wilcox was with me, and our seat was a carpenter's horse. When he wanted to applaud he would cry, 'Get off, Sully, get off,' and then he would pound away vigorously with both ends of our seat."

During the next succeeding years, Sully was to paint portraits which for vigor and truthfulness show him at his best. Two of these were painted in 1813, one being a half-length of James Ross of Pennsylvania, now hanging at the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts, and the other a whole-length of Samuel Coates, President of the Pennsylvania Hospital. The latter was a gift by Sully to this institution, and not, as it has been made to appear elsewhere, for a payment of $400. Sully, in his "Account of Pictures," places a value on it of that amount,* but the Minutes of the Hospital show very clearly that no money payment whatever entered into the transaction; thus:

"At a meeting of a number of the Contributors to the Pennsylvania Hospital, held the third day of the fifth month 1813, it having been stated that Thomas Sully had presented to the institution a likeness of Samuel Coates, President of the Board of Managers, the following Resolution being moved and seconded was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the thanks of this meeting be communicated to Thomas Sully for his valuable present of a likeness of Sam'l Coates, Prest. of the Board of Managers.

In connection with the full-length picture painted of Commodore Stewart, at this same period, Sully tells an amusing anecdote. After remarking that "As a class, Friends are the most patient sitters, and sailors the most impatient," he continues: "The most patient sailor I ever painted was 'Old Ironsides,' then Capt. Stewart . . . he called to arrange the time for a sitting and was just going away when I said to him, 'But, Captain, you have not told me the size.' 'Oh,' he replied, 'the old woman (his mother) wants me, and she shall have me altogether.'"

* As we pointed out in an earlier chapter, Sully invariably placed a valuation on everything he painted.

MEMOIRS OF THOMAS SULLY

We can hardly suppose that DuMaurier laid this anecdote under contribution when relating the career of "Trilby" (!).

Sully's experience when painting Decatur for the municipality of New York was of a very different character, for he notes that "he (Decatur) was a very impatient sitter, although a most gentlemanly man," remarking also that "he had very much of a French face, with a long nose." The portrait has never been regarded as a particularly happy effort of Sully's brush, and this restlessness on the part of Decatur during the sittings may be the explanation for its shortcomings.*

Sully's reputation had now become firmly established, and in the next few years sitters will come to him in increasing numbers. A glance at the list which is a part of this biography will confirm the statement. His income begins to show a gratifying increase, and a calculation of his gains during the next 10 years discloses an average yearly income of four thousand dollars ($4,000). Not wealth, certainly; but enabling the recipient to maintain his family in comfort, while free himself from pecuniary anxieties.

But Sully is not a man to wrap himself up in his own success, and turn his back on others less fortunate.† He has a ready sympathy for aspiring talent, and becomes active in all movements for the promotion of Art and encouragement of those engaged in its practice. He joins the Society formed by a body of artists looking to the development of the then recently established Academy of Fine Arts, and who were associated as "Pennsylvania Academicians." He was shortly after appointed

*Not the least interesting of Sully's notes connected with this portrait is the following: "About this time I saw a great deal of Irving. When I had done with Decatur, Irving carried me up to West Point; thence we went to Livingston and there parted. When I went out sketching he used to accompany me, and would employ his time in writing.

† Sully mentions meeting Eichholtz at Lancaster, Pa., in 1809, when the latter was struggling hard to acquire the rudiments of painting, "I gave him during my stay in Lancaster all the professional information I could impart."

to, and served on, a Committee "to organize a system for the management of the Schools of the Academy," and there can be little doubt that his views exercised a controlling influence in any plan adopted.

His readiness to aid and encourage younger artists is exhibited by the generous instruction given young Leslie (C. R.). The latter recounts the incident himself in his Memoirs, and we cannot do better than transcribe his own account of it. "Before I left Philadelphia, Mr. Sully, with whom I had become acquainted, gave me the first lesson I received in oil painting.* He began a copy of a picture in my presence, and then put his palette and brushes into my hand, telling me to proceed in the same way with a copy of my own. The next day he carried his work further, and I again followed him, and so on, until the copies were both finished ; thus explaining to me at once the processes of scumbling, glazing, etc."

This youth to whom Sully showed so much kindness, had through his skill in drawing, and especially by a sketch made of George Frederick Cooke, the actor, attracted the attention of a group of art connoisseurs in Philadelphia. They determined that the embryo artist should be afforded an opportunity for further developing his talents abroad. Under the lead of Samuel T. Bradford, the leading bookseller in the Philadelphia of that day, by whom young Leslie had been employed, a fund was subscribed for the purpose. The distinguished career that came to Leslie, following this start, fully justified the high opinion formed of his capacities.

Before his departure, Sully had playfully rallied him on his entire ignorance of painting in oil, at the same time offering to instruct him. Leslie very gratefully accepted the offer, as we have seen, and expressed so great a sense of obligation that Sully, to lighten the burden, said that he wanted no return except in kind, when he should demand it of him. To give Sully's own account, written later in life: "He laughed at this, and ridiculed the idea of his ever teaching me anything. But I knew where he was going to and assured him I was not joking. . . . When I went to London (this refers to the year 1837, when Sully went to England and painted Queen Victoria) I said, 'Now, Leslie, remember the promise you gave me.' I then made him tell me frankly my leading fault. 'Your pictures look,' he said 'as if you could blow them away.' 'Ah!' I replied, 'you mean that they lack strength?' 'Yes,' said he, 'that is it.' After I had labored on and, as I thought, corrected this fault, I asked him to tell me what other weakness he could see in my painting. He said he had no other suggestion to offer, and bid me go on my own way. Whenever he introduced me abroad, he would say, 'This is the gentleman who taught me how to paint.' He did me many acts of kindness. If I could put in money all the returns poor Charles made me, it would amount to hundreds of dollars."

What has just been related was jotted down when Thomas Sully was very far advanced in years, and long after Leslie had passed away. The anecdote has been given here at some length, for the reason that an impression appears to exist in certain quarters that Leslie had repaid Sully with downright ingratitude. It is evident that Sully himself harbored no feeling of injury as an outgrowth of Leslie's critical remark. Even so sympathetic a writer and admiring a critic as Tuckerman has adverted to Sully's "fairy-like, unsubstantial manner," qualifying this, however, by adding that "there are subjects and sitters to which such a style is exclusively adapted." But as between artists much must be allowed for, and no better proof could be forthcoming than the anecdote that Sully relates himself touching his own criticism of Benjamin West. The latter, having invited him to point out any defects he might see in his painting, Sully did not hesitate to tell the great man that he thought "his outlines were too hard" (!). Here was as outspoken a criticism as Leslie's reported expression, and addressed by one so young to so venerable a master might well have seemed presumptuous; but it was taken in good part, West even taking the trouble to explain that he did it purposely, "as a guide to the engravers," which Sully comments upon as being a mistake in his judgment.

MEMOIRS OF THOMAS SULLY

Sully, while essentially identified with portraiture, still adhered to the title of "History and Portrait Painter," apparently adopted when setting up his easel in Philadelphia. In fact, as late as 1829 we find him registered under that title, as also his daughter Jane, afterwards Mrs. Darley. It is not surprising, therefore, to find him putting this title to the proof when an opportunity presented itself.

In the fall of 1818 he was applied to by the Legislature of North Carolina for two full-length portraits of Washington. His reply was, a proposition that, instead of these, he should paint one historical picture representing some prominent action in which General Washington had taken part; and suggesting that the scene should be the crossing of the Delaware for the attack on Trenton.

This offer was accepted, and Sully then wrote asking for information as to the size of the place for which the picture was intended. Not receiving an answer, he proceeded with the work in a canvas of unusual dimensions (actually 17' 4" x 12' 5"). He was engaged for a very considerable time in painting this picture—Dunlap speaks of years—and had the extreme disappointment, after it was finished, of being informed that, owing to its great size, there was no place fitted to receive it, and so the picture was thrown back on his hands. Ultimately he was able to dispose of it for $500, to a frame-maker in Boston, who in turn sold it to the Boston Museum.* This institution ceased to exist in 1892, but we are happy to find that this picture passed into the possession of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, where quite recently the large canvas has been unrolled, put in order and placed on view.

Another historical piece, finished somewhat earlier, was the "Capture of Major André." It is said to have been painted for Kearney, the engraver, and the supposition followed that an engraving was to have been made from it. This, however, does not appear to have been done. An engraving of the "Washington Crossing the Delaware" was made by W. Humphrys and G. S. Lang, and published in Philadelphia in 1825.

*This was the old museum and theatre.

CHAPTER V

ESTABLISHES STUDIO IN HALL OF PHILOSOPHICAL SOCIETY—LATER CHANGES OF LOCATION—OCCUPIES HOUSE PROVIDED BY STEPHEN GIRARD.

AT the opening of the previous chapter we adverted to the localities in Philadelphia where Sully had carried on his painting, previous to going abroad, and immediately following his return. Two years after the latter event, his address has changed to the "Philosophical Hall", and here we shall find him pursuing his Art undisturbed for the next ten years.

The records of the Philosophical Society have aided us in establishing this fact, as well as of noting the relations of goodwill that existed on the part of the Society and its members towards the subject of our biography. At a meeting held on March 6, 1812, the question of leasing certain rooms to Mr. Sully was brought up, and the "Committee was empowered to execute a lease to Mr. Sully." Apparently this was for two rooms on the second floor of the building, across from the large room on the same floor, which has been invariably devoted to the uses of the Society itself. At the time of which we write, there appear to have been three rooms occupying the space now taken up by the single large room on the north side of the second floor. At a meeting held two months later, the Society is careful to note in its minutes that "The N. E. Room 2nd Story is ordered reserved for the Society in lease to Mr. Sully." The room retained under this limitation appears to have been known as the "Engravers' Room." Five years later further accommodations in the Hall are granted the artist. Under date of February 17, 1817, is an entry to the effect that "Mr. Sully's proposition to lease the unoccupied rooms is acceded to." These "unoccupied rooms" were undoubtedly on the first floor, and Sully's object in obtaining them would seem to be made clear through the following advertisement, appearing shortly afterwards :

T. Sully's
Gallery of Pictures is opened
For the Reception of Visitors at his Residence in the Philosophical Hall
South Fifth Street
Admittance 25 cents

Just what success attended this venture is not ascertainable. We are rather led to suppose that from a money-making standpoint it did not make a very good return. William Dunlap, journeying south in the autumn of 1819, stopped with Sully for a day or two. He notes that "He was at this time painting his great picture of the crossing of the Delaware and occupied the Philosophical Hall adjoining the State House. . . . He had (built) opened an exhibition gallery with little profit." These were dull times in portrait painting, and Dunlap mentions that Sully told him "he had not had a portrait to paint for Philadelphia since May last."

At this historical and familiar locale our artist was to continue down to the year 1822. A note written in that year indicates that a change was then impending. We quote the letter in full, as besides reflecting Sully's amiable traits ; it shows his delicate sense of obligation towards the fulfillment of any promise made.

floor. On visiting it this morning, by appointment for that purpose, I discovered that the front room was so much obscured by the trees on the opposite side of the street as to render the light unfit for the purpose.* I am therefore obliged with much disappointment and mortification to decline renting the house.

If I have been the occasion of any injury by my precipitancy, I will most cheerfully make amends.

Respectfully,

Yr. Obt. S^vt.

THOS. SULLY.

Not having succeeded in establishing himself on Chestnut Street, as we have just seen, Sully in 1823 and 1824 is to be found at 49 George Street, which address answers to Sansom Street of the present day. In 1825 he has migrated to the corner of Fifth and Minor Streets, while during 1826 and 1827 we find him established at 116 Chestnut Street. This address, under the new system of numbering, introduced a few years later, became 320 Chestnut Street. At the time of Sully's occupancy we find it described as "a fine old-fashioned three-storied brick dwelling—and which had a garden in its rear with outlets upon Hudson's Alley and upon Carpenter's Court."

It is pleasant to reflect that our artist, when relinquishing so agreeable a site, was not compelled to drop back into anything inferior. On the contrary, we shall find that his next move placed him in most congenial surroundings, and that through the consideration and nice feeling of his new landlord, special facilities were provided him for the prosecution of his art. Stephen Girard had acquired property in Chestnut Street, just below Fifth Street, included now in the Lafayette Building, belonging to the Girard Estate. In 1827 he made certain improvements to the property by demolishing some old structures on the Chestnut Street front and erecting on their sites three substantial four-storied brick buildings. Whether the house on Fifth Street afterwards known as 11 South 5th Street was erected at this time, or already stood upon the ground, seems difficult to determine. One account is to the effect that the house was "specially built for Mr. Sully by Stephen Girard with a suitable painting room, expressly for the purpose in the back part of the house," while the other is to the effect that "the house belonged to Stephen Girard and Girard made alterations in it to suit Mr. Sully's desires." In either event, the arrangement showed a friendly and appreciative regard for the comfort of the artist, and stands out as an agreeable incident in the life of the Merchant-Mariner. When painting the portrait of a Dr. Aitkin, begun on October 24, 1828, Sully is careful to note that it is "1st work in Girard's house." This would seem to settle pretty accurately the time of his having taken possession.

At this abode we shall find that he continued for the remainder of his life; a period of not less than 44 years. The painting-room appears to have been admirably situated and arranged. It has been described as "very large and lofty, lighted by a single window extending from floor to ceiling—which gave the painter a flood of light—regulated by easily adjusted curtains."

There was also in the house an exhibition room. A gentleman still living, who was on intimate terms with the artist and his family during the later period of their occupancy, states that "at the head of the first flight of stairs leading into the back building of the Sully house was the exhibition room, which served also as an anteroom to the studio." In addition to all these interior advantages, exterior ones were not wanting, as there appears to have been a good-sized yard included in the northern portion of the Sully lot, which insured to the studio a good northerly light.*

After the death of Stephen Girard, which occurred in 1831, Mr. Sully's leasehold was continued by the executors as later also by the

* This is confirmed through a list of Mr. Girard's property, filed in 1832, where occurs the following: "A lot of ground in the east side of Fifth street between Market and Chestnut Streets, north of the property occupied by Mr. Sully. Mr. Sully has the use of this lot for a garden."

Commissioners of the estate. There are references from time to time of renewals of the lease, as also changes in the amount of the annual rent. Thus in June, 1842, "Mr. Sully solicits a reduction of rent," and in the same month follows: "Mr. Sully's rent was reduced from $665 to $555 per annum." In 1861, when the Civil War had begun, there was a further reduction to $450 per annum "until better times."

Towards the close of his long tenancy, a gratifying mark of the regard felt for him in the community in which he had so long lived and labored, was the decision by the municipal authorities that certain changes in the City plan, involving the removal or diminution of the premises leased, should be deferred during Thomas Sully's lifetime. This was in 1867, when the building of a large market house (where the Bourse now stands) was about being inaugurated. An ordinance had been passed for the opening of Ranstead Street to the south of the building from Fourth to Fifth Street. This carried with it the necessity of demolishing the house occupied by Mr. Sully. The City Councils were appealed to by influential citizens in support of Mr. Sully's prayer to be left undisturbed in his old home in the closing years of his life. As the artist naively pleaded, referring to his wife and himself, "We shall not trouble you long." * To the lasting credit of City Councils, this appeal was not unheeded, and the width of the street opening at the 5th Street end was so reduced as to leave unscathed and intact the domicile in which Sully was to pass the remaining years of his life.

* There seems to have been something prophetic in this, for Mrs. Sully died on July 25th of the same year, and but a few months following her husband's prediction.

CHAPTER VI

PAINTS FULL-LENGTH PORTRAIT OF GENERAL LAFAYETTE AT HIS FAREWELL VISIT TO THE UNITED STATES IN 1824-25.

THE farewell visit paid to the United States in 1824-5 by the Marquis de la Fayette was an event that thrilled and roused to enthusiasm the entire country. Without attempting to minimize the hearty reception accorded the distinguished Frenchman in every part of the Union, it is safe to say that in no other State or city was greater affection shown his person than through the tributes paid him by the inhabitants of Pennsylvania and the citizens of Philadelphia. Preparations to welcome him in the city were promptly set on foot, through a "Committee of Arrangements" appointed by the City Councils. This body began its meetings almost immediately on the announcement of the arrival of General Lafayette upon our shores.

The Committee's first effort was directed towards ascertaining the date at which the distinguished guest might be expected to arrive in Philadelphia. For this purpose two members were delegated to visit New York, where General Lafayette had landed on August 15, 1824. At a formal meeting of the Committee on the morning of August 18, it was stated that, apprehending "the General might arrive unexpectedly in this City", with the concurrence of the Mayor, they had engaged rooms at the Mansion House for the General. The Mayor stated that he had forwarded to the General the invitation and resolutions of this city. At an evening session more exact and reassuring news was brought by Mr. Brown, of the Committee, who stated he had been present in New York at the delivery of the letter from the Mayor of this city to General Lafayette, and that the General contemplated visiting here from the 10th to 15th of September. As it turned out ultimately, the Marquis after landing, made a journey through New York State, traveling as far as Albany, and it was therefore not until towards the latter end of September that he set out from New York on his visit to Philadelphia. The Marquis had desired, on quitting Trenton (N. J.), to travel to Bordentown (N. J.), pass the night at Point Breeze with the Comte de Surveilliers (Joseph Bonaparte), and resume his journey on the following morning by steamboat to Bristol (Pa.). The Committee, on the other hand, had planned that he should cross the bridge over the Delaware at Trenton, and be received by the deputations and military escort at Morrisville (Pa.). The following letter confirms the determination of the latter arrangement, and exhibits the amiable disposition shown by the Marquis in yielding to the solicitations of the citizens of Pennsylvania. The letter is addressed to a member of the Committee of Arrangements at Philadelphia by A. H. Brown, representing the Committee.

" My dear Sir :

I have just had a private interview with General (La) Fayette, he says he is ready to carry into full effect any arrangement the Committee have or may make. After hearing our arrangement, he says it is very good, and to him pleasing. He is now gone to dinner and will see me again in the morning, he goes to church tomorrow, in the afternoon visits J. Bonaparte, returns to Trenton in the evening, and will be ready for us on Monday morning at 10 o'clock. I have seen Govr. Williamson, he says he will deliver the General to us on Monday morning at whatever place we may designate. I said, on the line of Pennsylvania, he said, that it would be awkward to the General to change from one carriage to another at the bridge, but would accede to any arrangement we pleased to make. Bispham says our quarters are all prepared, the General is at the same house.

Yrs truly

Saturday evening 6 o'clock."

On the journey from Morrisville to Philadelphia on the following Monday, a stop was made at Frankford, where quarters had been prepared at the Arsenal for the General's suite. The night was spent there, and on the following morning the Marquis proceeded on his march to Philadelphia. The venerable Judge Peters drove over from Belmont and sat beside him in the carriage. It is not our province to record in detail the incidents of the entry into Philadelphia and of the events that followed. We propose rather to pass to an event linking Sully's name with that of the distinguished guest, and to give some account connected with the splendid full-length portrait that still ornaments the building in which the citizens of Philadelphia paid homage to the former trusted and beloved companion-in-arms of General Washington. An opportunity to have his likeness perpetuated through the genius of Thomas Sully was eagerly seized upon, and on October 2nd the following note was addressed to General Lafayette:

" Oct. 2, 1824.

Dear Sir :

A number of our most respectable citizens are desirous of presenting to the city of Philadelphia your portrait by Sully, should you consent to sit for it. This we most respectfully request in their behalf, knowing the very high esteem in which the possession of such a portrait would be held by our fellow-citizens.

Mr. Sully will consult your own time for the purpose both here and elsewhere.

We are, most respectfully,

Your obd't,

TO GEN'L LAFAYETTE.

It is stated elsewhere that an original study of Lafayette by Sully was executed at this time in Philadelphia. This we are inclined to doubt, and will state our reasons for it. Sully, in his reminiscences, states: "Lafayette I painted from life in Washington for the City of Philadelphia," and adding, "He invited me very cordially to visit him in France."

In the request made by the Committee that the General should sit to Sully for his portrait, the concluding lines are to the effect that "Mr. Sully will consult your own time for the purpose both here and elsewhere." The note conveying the request to sit to Sully is dated only 3 days before General Lafayette's departure from Philadelphia, which occurred on October 5th, 1824. It is more than likely, therefore, that with the various engagements and occupations incident to his visit, the General should have preferred to postpone sittings until a time of less stress and demand upon him. It was doubtless with a view of gaining his consent to sit that the Committee worded its request as it did, not making it incumbent upon him to sit at Philadelphia. It seems probable therefore that the study of the head of the Marquis now owned by a gentleman in Philadelphia,* was painted not at Philadelphia but at Washington, D. C.

The history of the full-length portrait is well worth reciting, and more especially as the circumstances surrounding it are more clearly ascertained than heretofore.

Sully's entry in his "Account of Pictures" is to the effect that it was "painted by subscription." He values the painting at $600. The writers have been unable to discover any list of subscribers and further researches lead them to suppose that nothing of a formal character was drawn up. It is probable that the Committee had intended soliciting subscriptions, but that in some way the plan miscarried. Certain it is that the portrait remained under Sully's control for a number of years after it was finished. That the Committee recognized its responsibility, there is evidence in a balance paid over to Sully from funds left after the expenses of the Lafayette Ball. In the account of Henry D. Gilpin, Treasurer, appears the following entry:

* Mr. Herbert Welsh.

MEMOIRS OF THOMAS SULLY

" Investment of Col. Prevost, rec'd back & paid to Mr. Sully, $235.68 " and the following receipt :

" 1827, Feby 21st Rec'd of H. D. Gilpin fifteen dollars and 77 cents, which with $235.68 stock transferred to me on the 4th of Jan'y 1827, making together $251.45 is in full of the above balance paid to me by the Managers of the Lafayette Ball, towards the painting of Gen'l Lafayette.

THOS. SULLY."

Just what the "stock" may have been is not made clear, but as the artist gives his receipt for so much money, the inference would seem to be that it was convertible into cash. This payment of a sum little over $250 is the only evidence of any remuneration having been received by Thomas Sully for the full-length life-size likeness of General Lafayette, now hanging in the Hall of Independence. At a subsequent period he presented the portrait to the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, and this institution in the year 1848 and with the artist's consent, passed it over to the City of Philadelphia in exchange for a picture by Benjamin West.

Of course the Hall of Independence is its appropriate resting place, and both the Academy and the artist were well advised, when arranging for its transfer there.

It is not surprising to discover evidences of true friendship having been established between the artist and his distinguished sitter; for we shall find this feeling invariably animating those with whom he had to do. We have already alluded to the invitation given Sully by Lafayette to visit him at La Grange, which the former records himself. In a letter from that place of date January 1, 1827, to a correspondent in Washington, the Marquis sends this message: "If Mr. Sully comes to Washington, or when you write, be pleased to mention me very affectionately to him."

PAINTS A PORTRAIT OF JUDGE HOPKINSON FOR DARTMOUTH COLLEGE—FRIENDSHIP FORMED WITH FANNY KEMBLE AND PORTRAITS PAINTED
OF HER ON HER VISIT TO THIS COUNTRY WITH HER FATHER, CHARLES KEMBLE—PAINTS THE LATTER IN CHARACTER.

WE now approach a period when Sully came to occupy a position of still greater prominence, and to be recognized as the most eminent portrait painter in the United States. The year 1827 had witnessed the death of both Gilbert Stuart and Charles Willson Peale. Each of these had continued practising his art almost until the end. Peale had been succeeded by his son Rembrandt, while Stuart left no male descendant of his name to succeed him. His daughter Jane studied under him, and made creditable copies of her father's works. His nephew, Gilbert Stuart Newton, painted in England and attained considerable reputation. Henry Inman, born in 1801, was prominent until 1839, while his eccentric but distinguished instructor, John Wesley Jarvis, died in that year. Other names survived,—Trumbull and Vanderlyn, living respectively down to 1843 and 1852. But Trumbull, living to a great age, was an octogenarian when Sully was but in middle life, and Vanderlyn passed much of his time abroad. John Neagle, in Philadelphia, who had married Sully's stepdaughter Mary, was recognized as a painter of great merit, but he never gained the vogue enjoyed by Sully. And so our artist's gifts as a portrait painter came to be adjudged superior to any of his contemporaries.

Thus, the authorities of Dartmouth College, when requesting Judge Joseph Hopkinson to sit for his portrait, pass a resolution reciting as follows :

MEMOIRS OF THOMAS SULLY

"Whereas Steuart (Stuart) has died since the original vote (of Dartmouth College) was passed and whereas Sully is believed in this section of the United States to be unsurpassed by any living artist within reach, I therefore now respectfully inquire—if you will permit the College by their Agent to employ Mr. Sully to paint your portrait.

GEO. C. SHATTUCK.

Boston, Jan'y 4th, 1835."

This same year witnessed his election to membership in the American Philosophical Society. The form of proposal and the names attached to it speak for themselves :

"The undersigned beg leave to recommend as a member of the Society, Thos. Sully, Esq., one of the most distinguished painters of the United States.

CONDY RAGUET

S. V. MERRICK
HENRY C. CAREY
HARTMAN T. BACHE
CH. D. MEIGS

We shall find that not very long after this the most important commission probably of his career was to follow, and that the painting of the young Queen Victoria, from life sittings, marked a summit to his fame, as well as a lasting memorial of his genius. It seems appropriate, and forms a gratifying reflection, that our city is happily linked with this highwater-mark of Sully's genius, through the possession of the portrait by the Society in Philadelphia for whom the commission was originally executed.

So, when, a short time before, the Kembles, father and daughter, arrived on our shores (1832), and came to Philadelphia, it was only natural that Sully's brush should be the one invoked to paint their portraits. Fanny Kemble, in her lively and witty "Recollections", tells of sitting to Sully, and of the sympathetic relations established between the artist and herself. Writing two or three years later from the United States to an intimate friend in England, she comments on his amiability and high sense of honor:

"BRANCHTOWN [near Philadelphia], MAY 27TH, 1835.

Dearest H—— : *

. . . "I am extremely vexed at all the trouble you and Emily have taken about my picture, for the artist himself, (Mr. Sully of Philadelphia) is not satisfied with it himself, and I am sure would be rather sorry than glad that it was exhibited. That artist is a charming person, and I must tell you how he proceeded about that picture. When your letter came, acknowledging the receipt of it, he asked how you were satisfied. I told him the truth, and what you had written on the subject of the likeness. He did not appear stupidly annoyed, but sorry for your disappointment, and told me that he had been from the first dissatisfied with it as a likeness himself. He pressed upon my acceptance for you, a little melancholy head of me, an admirable and not too much flattered likeness; but as he had given that to his wife, of whom I am very fond, of course I could not deprive her of it, and there the matter rested. But when, some time after some pictures he had painted for us were paid for, he steadfastly refused the price agreed upon for yours, because it had not satisfied him himself. He said that had you been even less pleased with it, he should not therefore have refused the money, but his own conscience, he added, bore witness to the truth of your objections, and when that was the case, he invariably acted in the same way and declined to receive payment for what he didn't consider worth it. As he is our friend, we could not press the money upon him, but we have got him to undertake a portrait of Dr. Mease,† and I have added several grains more to my regard for him. As to the likeness, had you seen me about three months after my marriage you would have thought better of it."

* Harriet St. Leger (pronounced Sellenger!)

† Father of Pierce Butler, who married Fanny Kemble, and a man of distinction in the Philadelphia of that day.

MEMOIRS OF THOMAS SULLY

In printing this letter Mrs. Kemble comments as follows :

"The portrait in question painted for my friend, and now I believe still at Ardgillan Castle, was one of six painted of me at various times, the best likeness of them all being one that he took of me in the part of Beatrice, for which I did not sit."

Three years later, when addressing the same correspondent, Mrs. Kemble writes :

"Touching my picture, my dearest Harriet, I am desirous to say that your spirited defence of your right to it (whether you like it or not) is admirable, that it certainly shall not be taken from you by force, and that there was no intention whatever of infuriating you by the civil proposal that was made to relieve you of it, by sending you a more satisfactory one, under the impression that you are not satisfied with what you have. . . . Sully is now in England. I wish there were any chance of your seeing him, but after remaining there long enough to paint The Queen, he intends visiting Paris for a short time and then returning home.* He is a great friend of mine, and one of the few people here that I find pleasure in associating with. As his delicacy about being paid for the picture arose from the idea that, not being satisfied with the likeness, you probably did not care to keep it, I have no doubt that, the present state of your regard for it being made clear to him, he will not object any more to receiving the price of it.

"Phila., Saturday, March 18, 1838."

The portrait of Fanny Kemble in the character of "Beatrice", hanging at the Academy of Fine Arts in Philadelphia, and the one that she herself preferred to any other of Sully's, reflects all the charm and animation that descriptions of her have sought to convey.

"Ever since Fanny Kemble burst upon the world at the age of twenty she

* If there was no meeting with Miss St. Leger, the "dearest Harriet" in the correspondence (which we think there must have been), another friend was more fortunate, for in a letter to "Mrs. Jameson" in London, written from Philadelphia May twenty-seventh, 1838, occurs : "I am glad you like Sully, because I love him."

MEMOIRS OF THOMAS SULLY

has been an object of interest to the English Race in both hemispheres. . . . Mrs. Kemble lacked the stature and perfect symmetry of Mrs. Siddons, but she had the noble head, the effulgent eyes, the sensitive mouth and flexible nostrils, the musical voice, the dignified and graceful gestures, which distinguished her Aunt; and in addition, the sense of humor, the mobile temperament quick as flame, the poetic sensibility, which characterized her mother."

So wrote a gentleman in Boston,* recalling the impressions of his youth.

At the time of her American début she was just 23 years of age. She notes it in a letter to her intimate friend, Miss St. Leger:

"Thursday, Nov. 27th.

"This is my birthday—In England always one of the gloomiest days of this gloomy month; here my windows are all open and the warm sun streaming in. . . . I am to-day three and twenty. Where is my life gone to? As the child said, "Where does the light go when the candle is out? . . ."

She seemed to hold a fascination for both young and old. Daniel Webster, writing from Washington to an intimate friend, adds a postscriptum to this effect:

"Fanny Kemble is here, turning everybody's head. I went to see and hear her, last Eve', and paid for it by a tremendous cold. I hear that the Venerable Judges go constantly."

And in confirmation we find Judge Story writing his wife:

"We have had little to do this week in Court. . . . Having some leisure on our hands, the Chief Justice and myself have devoted some of it to attendance upon the theatre to hear Miss Fannie Kemble, who has been in this City the past week."

A play that she often appeared in, and with which the American

* The late Henry Lee.

MEMOIRS OF THOMAS SULLY

tour was opened, was Milman's "Fazio", in which her father usually took the title part. Sully painted him in the character, and this portrait also hangs in the Academy. She herself depicted "Bianca," and her grave and anxious air in the picture from Sully's brush forms a striking foil to her smiling and arch "Beatrice." In England, when appearing in the play, she writes of it:

"Next Wednesday week I am to come out in Bianca, in Milman's 'Fazio.' Do you know the play? It is very powerful, and my part is a very powerful one indeed. I have hopes it may succeed greatly. Mr. Warde is to be my Fazio, for, I hear, people object to my having my father's constant support, and wish to see me act alone; what geese, to be sure—I wonder whether they think my father has hold of strings by the means of which he moves my arms and legs".

And on her American tour she writes of the character:

"'Bianca,' which they have everywhere chosen for my opening part; and it is a good one for that purpose, as I generally act and look well in it and it is the sort of play that all sorts of people can comprehend."

John Sartain [the noted engraver], in his "Reminiscences," * mentions having been present in Sully's studio when Charles Kemble sat to him for the portrait of "Fazio."

"I was introduced to Mr. Kemble in Sully's painting-room, going there by appointment for the purpose. When the sitting was over, Mr. Kemble stepped down from the raised platform and, looking at the picture, remarked that the face appeared large. Sully said, 'You have a large face.' To which Kemble replied, 'Fortunate for me—in my profession.'"

We find an echo of this pronouncement in Ellen Terry's "Story of her Life," where she exclaims, "Once more I reflect that a face is the chiefest equipment of the actor."

* "Reminiscences of a Very Old Man," John Sartain, 1808-1897. [D. Appleton & Co., N. Y.]

Dr. Johnson, in speaking of David Garrick at Mrs. Thrale's house, is quoted as saying, "David, Madam, looks much older than he is; for his face has had double the business of any other man's; it is never at rest; when he speaks one minute he has quite a different countenance to what he assumes the next; I don't believe he ever kept the same look for half an hour together in the whole course of his life; and such an eternal restless fatiguing play of the muscles must certainly wear out a man's face before its real time."

Charles Kemble spoke from a long experience, when making his semi-playful retort to Sully: "These 'counterfeit presentments' of the Kembles, father and daughter, arrest the eye of the visitor to the gallery of portraits at the Philadelphia Academy of Fine Arts, and recall their early triumphs here in Philadelphia."

SECOND VISIT TO ENGLAND—COMMISSIONED BY ST. GEORGE'S SOCIETY TO PAINT A PORTRAIT OF QUEEN VICTORIA FROM LIFE SITTINGS—VOYAGE OVER—ARRIVAL IN LONDON—DELAY IN OBTAINING DESIRED SITTINGS—PAINTS OTHER PORTRAITS—QUEEN CONSENTS TO SIT—PORTRAIT BEGUN FROM LIFE ON MARCH 22ND, 1838.—SOME ACCOUNT OF SITTINGS—PICTURE COMPLETED MAY 15TH—PAINTS A "BISHOP'S HALF-LENGTH" OF THE QUEEN FOR HODGSON & GRAVES—VISITS PARIS, FRANCE—IMPRESSIONS AT LOUVRE AND LUXEMBOURG—RETURNS TO LONDON—SAILS FOR HOME.

IN the full plenitude of his powers, Sully determined to revisit England. Twenty-seven years had elapsed since his experiences as a student in London. Great changes had naturally come about in the English art world. Benjamin West had long since been laid to rest under the dome of St. Paul's Cathedral.* Raeburn, the great Scotch painter, was no more;† and only a few years preceding the time of which we write Sir Thomas Lawrence had been suddenly carried off,‡ when it was reasonable to suppose that a decade at least remained to him for the practice of his art. Sully may possibly have felt that the time was peculiarly propitious for an artist of established reputation to try his fortune at the English capital. Without scrutinizing closely the list of native English painters of that period, it can be safely advanced that beyond one or two names in the field of portraiture, that branch of painting lacked votaries of marked distinction.

On the eve of his proposed voyage, the reputation Sully had already acquired was significantly confirmed through his selection to paint a portrait of the young Queen Victoria, who had just succeeded to the English throne. The Society of the Sons of St. George in Philadelphia, learning of our artist's intended visit to England, adopted the resolution "to memorialize her Majesty to sit for her picture to Mr. Sully for the gratification and use of the Society." The memorial was couched in most flattering terms towards our artist, reciting as it did: "We have been induced thus to petition your Majesty in consequence of the contemplated departure of Thomas Sully, Esq., for England, whom we beg leave to recommend to your Majesty as the most finished artist in portraits in America, who would do ample justice to your picture, and who combines in himself the various recommendations of being an Englishman by birth, an accomplished artist and a gentleman."

The generally received opinion has been that Sully went to England for no other purpose than the painting of the Queen's portrait. It will be noticed that the trip had been determined upon previously to the commission from the St. George Society.

Our artist was not to travel alone, for after discussion in the home circle it was decided that his daughter Blanche should accompany him. It was a natural choice, for she had ever been his close companion, accompanying him in his walks and rambles about the city and its environs, and her father on that account facetiously used to call her his "walking-stick". We shall find Blanche playing an important part in Sully's English surroundings and contributing in no small degree towards the success of her father's mission abroad.

"Poulson's Advertiser" of October 5, 1837, alludes to our artist's approaching departure: "We understand that our distinguished fellow citizen, Mr. Sully, the artist, is about to visit Europe, having been called thither to paint several portraits of eminent men." We think our modern journalists would have been more alert in ascertaining and noting the commission for the Queen's portrait. On the eve of Sully's departure, friends and admirers in Philadelphia, opened a subscription paper "for the purchase of a memorial of respect and friendship to be presented to Mr. Sully." A sum approximating $300 was promptly raised, Mr. John Vaughan * being appointed Treasurer of the fund. The names of the subscribers are so representative that we append the list, the original having been found among the papers of the late Nicholas Biddle. Just what form the Committee finally adopted for the memorial we have not been so fortunate as to trace. It may have been decided that the fund raised would be acceptable as a traveling purse, and so presented; but this is only conjecture.

Just before the date fixed for sailing, our artist's younger son, Alfred, born in 1821,* received an appointment to West Point, and the father's pleasure is shown in the following letter, addressed to the then Secretary of War, with whom he was on particularly friendly terms :

" TO HONORABLE JOEL POINSETT: "

I have taken passage with my daughter for London and am to sail on the 10th inst. from New York.

I cannot leave home without the gratification of returning you my grateful thanks for your kindness in appointing my son on trial as a cadet at West Point. I hope his future good conduct will prove his gratitude for the privilege.

I pray God bless and prosper you.

THOS. SULLY.

Philada., Oct. 2, 1837."

With these fresh evidences of friendship and regard from his fellow townsmen, and the notification of his son's appointment as a cadet at West Point, it must have been in a happy frame of mind that Sully embarked with his daughter on his English pilgrimage.

Enroute to New York to embark, Blanche in a farewell note to her mother writes : "but before I close this epistle let me tell you we had the satisfaction of having a shake of Horace Binney's hand at the wharf in Burlington, and moreover of seeing Mr. Carey running down the Main Street after our boat had left the wharf."

In after letters written by Blanche Sully and her father, incidents of the voyage are related, and references made to some of the passengers on board the ship "Quebec," Captain Hebard.

* Was graduated at West Point in 1841, and served with much distinction. At the close of the Civil War, in which he fought, was brevetted Maj. Genl. of Volunteers and Brigadier Genl. in the regular army. "Fort Sully," established in Dakota Territory in 1866 was named for him.

They liked both the ship and the captain, so much so, that their minds were set upon returning in the same vessel if possible.*

Two days before entering the British Channel the ship encountered a heavy gale, but on Nov. 1st, Sully was able to write his wife: "We are at this moment gliding calmly by the Isle of Wight and the mainland—we have a noble vessel and a complete Captain; I wish we could return with him—Blanche is a noble and brave girl; but Oh! how she has suffered with seasickness (for the first week)—we have had pleasant passengers and many we hope to see again."

The next day (Nov. 2nd) Blanche writes: "This morning immediately after our breakfast we assembled our baggage, put it on board the Pilot-Boat and were off before 10 o'clock.—At twelve got into the Stage for London." She describes the beauty of the scenery, stopping at Guilford in the evening for dinner, falling asleep and then "I found myself rumbling over stones—'twas London!—think of it. I thought I was dreaming—but no, the noise and bustle soon convinced me to the contrary—at nine arrived at a splendid hotel called Hatchett's,—took us up stairs into a handsome drawing room—had a fire and by ten another waiter in full dress brought us our tea in great style."

They did not settle themselves at the later address in Marlborough Street until towards the end of the month, for through the medium of that invaluable record which Sully kept we find under date of Nov. 29th (1837) the following entry: "Bust, Miss E. Bates, painted in London at 46 G. Marlborough St." This lady, born June 25, 1820 and christened Elizabeth Anne, was the daughter of Mr. Joshua Bates and his wife Lucretia Sturgis.† Mr. Bates, the father, came from Wareham, Mass., and was for many years a partner in the banking house of Baring Bros.—this daughter Elizabeth was married in England to Sylvain van der Weyer, then Belgian Minister to England, in 1838. Blanche Sully writing from London to her family, communicates "In the evening dressed and went to Mrs. Bates' was introduced to the Belgian Minister, with his star and garter (?), by the way he has the handsomest legs I ever saw." (!) Other entries of portraits painted follow the one of Miss Bates showing that Sully was not idle but employing his time while awaiting the hoped-for opportunity to paint the Queen's portrait from life.

The Memorial drawn up by the St. George's Society had been sealed and delivered into Sully's hands; but when he made application to our Embassy in London for its presentation, he discovered that royal and diplomatic usages forbade the delivery of or receiving of a sealed communication into the hands of the Queen or her representative. Here was a dilemma! Fortunately, our artist had in some way provided himself with a copy of the sealed paper,* and this the American Minister, readily undertook to transmit. It was on Dec. 28th or almost two months following our traveler's arrival in England that notice of a favorable reply to the solicitation embodied in the Memorial of the St. George's Society came to hand. On that day Blanche wrote to her family: "(Thursday) Mr. Jaudon took his first sitting—soon after he went, in popped Mr. Stevenson (U. S. Minister to Court of St. James) to inform us of good news!!! The Queen consents to sit most willingly—think of that! The news came through Lord Melbourne. She is now at Windsor Castle passing the Christmas holidays . . . and as soon as she comes to town she sends word that she'll gratify Mr. Sully."

The intimation received through Lord Melbourne's note was that the first sitting would be granted "in the middle of February" (1838). We find Sully writing his daughter Jane (Mrs. Darley) under date of Feb. 14th: "I have kept this letter open in hope to tell you at its close, that I had begun the Queen's portrait but the day is not yet fixed until after the 'Drawing-Room' but I am told it will be arranged this month" (February).

* Sully writes his wife from London in November: "Tell Mr. Sill it was fortunate that he gave me a Copy of the Memorial as otherwise the one intended for the Queen could not have been received, as it was sealed."

As will appear later, the first sitting actually did not take place until more than a month after this was written, i. e., on March 22nd (1838).

A glance at Victoria's occupations and correspondence at this period will show the demands upon her time, and at the very moment that our artist was endeavoring to obtain sittings, active preparations had begun for the grand ceremony of her coronation, which took place in the June following. But in this matter of obtaining sittings let the artist recount his own story.*

"After I had almost despaired of being able to obtain a sitting, my friend Lord Francis Egerton secured Lord Palmerston's† influence in my behalf. I called early one day on the latter; he had just turned out of his bed and was sipping his morning coffee. 'Everything is being arranged,' he said. 'The Queen will sit to-day at ten.' I found him a delightful person, who reminded me of Henry Clay in his manners. A painting room was arranged for my accommodation in Buckingham Palace. . . . The Queen came to the sittings with her Secretary, Baroness Lehtzen. She (the Queen) was very affable, like a well-bred lady of Philadelphia or Boston and used to talk about different things. I told her I would get my daughter to sit with the Regalia, if there would be no impropriety, in order to save her the trouble. 'Oh, no, no impropriety,' replied Victoria, 'but don't spare me; if I can be of service, I will sit.' After that my daughter sat with the Regalia, which weighed thirty or forty pounds. The earrings had to be tied with a loop, as I had not allowed her ears to be pierced. One day the Queen sent word that she would come in if my daughter would remain where she was. But of course Blanche stepped down, and the two girls, who were almost the same age, chatted together quite familiarly. . . . Her mouth was always a little open—probably owing to a shortness of the upper lip—and thus I painted

† We think Lord Melbourne is intended. He was very close to the young Queen, and she was guided by his advice and knowledge of her duties, in this early stage of her career. It was Lord Melbourne who signified Victoria's willingness to sit for her portrait to Sully; communicated through our Minister Mr. Stevenson.

it. But the upper part of her face was very fine, and her eyes, although protuberant, were beautiful. . . ."

The foregoing appeared when Thomas Sully was a very old man, and while his memory seems to have served him well, we think our readers will enjoy the account of two sittings described by our artist himself in letters to his family, and written at the actual time when the sittings were taking place :

"Monday (April) 2nd. One o'clock.

Have just returned from the Palace, and sit down to write you all about it. . . . At nine I received a note from the Baroness Lehzen to say Her Majesty had commanded her to acquaint me that she would give me a sitting at eleven o'clock. I answered by the Page in a note that I should be there at ten to prepare myself. Changed my dress and reached the Palace at ten, via cab. I found my way without help to my quarters in the Palace, set my Palette and all in apple-pie order long before the Queen entered with the Baroness and a pet dog—a Republican dog! so independent in his taste, that he turned a deaf ear to the Sovereign of England when she called the audacious animal to her, in the most endearing terms—and when the whim took him would mount the throne and lay his head in her lap to be fondled! Two ladies entered by request and that the conversation between them and the Queen might not divert her from the proper position, they were seated according to my wish close to my right. "Am I seated properly" said the Queen—"Yes"—I replied "but I am not"—so I removed my easel. The Tiara that her Majesty had put on was of the most suitable shape and proportions, and she seemed pleased with my approval and its reason.

"Pray Mr. Sully what have you on that other canvass?"—(the black canvass I had brought to cover my sketch). The Baroness enquired how it was that Saturday had not been used: "Did I not say that we should expect you then?" I reminded her that I was to wait until I heard from her the pleasure of the Queen.

"Oh! then I am quite in fault, but the Queen waited for you ever so long." Her Majesty laughed playfully and good naturedly at the blunder—Thought I, turn about is fair play—I too have been twice disappointed.* (!)

* Sully here alludes to two postponed sittings after appointments fixed and attendance on his part at Buckingham Palace.

MEMOIRS OF THOMAS SULLY

In her conversation with the ladies, I had a rare opportunity of seeing The Queen throw off all constraint and talk and laugh like a happy girl of thirteen, long! long! may she have that light and happy heart.

In speaking of some lady's personal beauty she used an odd application of term: "very clever eyes." She asked if they knew who was to be presented next Levee. . . . "I cannot give you more than three quarters of an hour this morning Mr. Sully—but on Wednesday I will give you a good long sitting." So I bowed and the Queen left her Chair to look at what I had done. So did the rest—I begged their candid remarks, and I must be allowed to say that they warmly approved my beginning; particularly the mouth which is a nice point to achieve in her portrait. When the Queen and the Baroness had left the Room the ladies remained to look at the picture, and at my earnest request said that the face was rather full and the shadow under the lip rather strong. Put away my things and after some difficulty reached the door of exit—walked directly home and after washing my pencils have written you this long yarn."

"Wednesday 4th (April).

4 o'clock—just returned from Buckingham Palace and I sit down to tell you how I got on.

On entering the Palace, I met the Baroness in going to my room; I told her I had come thus early to get ready—"Quite right" said she, and directed a Page to accompany me. The fire was not kindled nor the room in order, but all was done like magic. In fixing the throne I placed the curtain here and there until I had fixed on the best position for light and shade. Got everything ready and at near 12 Her Majesty entered, attended by the same company—ascended the steps—placed her feet in the foot-muff and observed that I had changed the position—so I explained. She is a good sitter, and continues the same affable and unrestrained manner. But altho she said much to the Ladies and her Secretary the Baroness, I don't remember any remarkable observation. If one might judge by the manner I should conclude that in governing, she will have much her own way. (!) A Page announced the visit of Sir D(avid) Wilkie with his picture of her Majesty's first Council—but he had to wait at least half an hour until my sitting was over. She descended the throne and came 'round and looked at the picture and seemed satisfied. As she approached the door I advanced and opened it, and the next; this I thought I might be allowed, altho' I would not presume to offer any aid in taking or leaving the chair—yet after all she is not a person to be offended with a well-timed and respectful courtesy tho' offered by one not privileged. The Baroness afterward brought me the Royal Crown to paint from, and it kept me busy until past three. She requested when I had done to ring for a Page and send (it) to her as it was her particular care to keep the jewels of the Crown and she would not have anyone meddle with it. . . . The Crown being disposed of, and an appointment made for next Saturday, I left the Palace."

The formal description and title of the painting is to this effect: "Portrait of Her Majesty The Queen in her robes of state ascending the throne in the House of Lords", and this attitude the Philadelphia picture most graphically and gracefully portrays. Sully's daughter Blanche, whose connection with the sittings has been described, related after her father's death that "in response to an inquiry from the Queen why Mr. Sully had painted her ascending the throne instead of seated upon it, he replied that she was too short of stature; that had she been seated, the draperies would have spoiled the whole effect."

This was a brave statement of fact, as well as an artistic truth; and the Queen appears to have had too much native good sense to be offended by the reference to her lack of inches.* In fact, Blanche Sully added that "it evidently pleased her, for she presented the artist with two of her autographs."

Of all the various portraits of The Queen painted at the period of this picture or within a few years of it, none, to the writer's mind, conveys an equal queenly grace. Sully's portrayal, without derogating from the dignity expected in the heiress of the British throne, invests the figure with a certain youthful charm of expression that at once enlists sympathy and admiration. Her letters at this time to her uncle, King

* That the Queen was not blind to her deficiency in height is made manifest by an entry in her Journal: "I lamented my being so short, which Lord M.—— smiled at, and thought no misfortune." ("Girlhood of Queen Victoria." Conversation with Lord Melbourne at about the date of Sully's visit.)

MEMOIRS OF THOMAS SULLY

Leopold of Belgium, reveal a warm and affectionate nature. "My beloved Uncle," "My dearest Uncle," are her invariable forms in addressing him; and as showing the affection she inspired in him, he addressed her as "My dearest and most beloved Victoria". It is the reflection of such a nature that Sully has succeeded so admirably in getting on his canvas. What has been written of his art by Tuckerman is brought to mind. "His organization fits him to sympathize with the fair and lovely, rather than the grand and comic.—Sully's forte is the graceful."

Letters written from home exhibit the interest with which our artist's family followed his fortunes abroad. Thomas Sully, Jr.,* his eldest son, then painting portraits himself, writes his sister Blanche:

"I hope now you have both of you been long enough in London to feel less homesick, the first 3 months away is the worst part of it. I should like to know what father is doing. . . . I hope father will paint the Queen."

This was written from Philadelphia on February 1, 1838, and under this date young Sully adds, "and a very cold day."

In April he writes her again:

"Do not hurry home. I hope father will finish the Queen's picture completely in London, to show it there; if living in London has cost him so much, one month more will not hurt him; when of course he is aware of the great benefit it will hereafter be to him, as I know that his picture will be the best of them. Robes again I say. Tell him to excuse my impertinence."

The question of costume (robes) here hinted at is emphasized in a letter addressed to his father in the same month:

*Thomas Wilcocks Sully, commonly called "Thomas Sully, Jr.," was born January 3rd, 1811, in Philadelphia and followed his father's profession. He painted with a good deal of ability and had as sitters a number of well-known actors: Wm. E. Burton as Bob Acres; Edwin S. Conner as Romeo; Edwin Forrest, and Robert C. Maywood as Tam O'Shanter were among these. His father was very much attached to him all through his life and did everything possible to encourage him. His health gave way, and he died when in his 36th year. Sully's "Boy with a Torn Hat" (in the Boston Museum) is a likeness of him when 10 years of age.

MEMOIRS OF THOMAS SULLY

"I hope you will paint the Queen and in her robes, of course, for it will do for a portrait of anybody without them, and we are not used to seeing such things here."

These are the only intimations found that any consideration had ever been given to any different style of portrait than the one Sully actually painted. The subject might have been discussed en famille, but we doubt whether any other form of portrait than the one adopted and carried out had ever formed itself in our artist's mind. The head painted of the Queen and now hanging at the Metropolitan Museum in New York City, was begun on March 22nd and completed on May 15th. (From this portrait all the others were produced.) The length of time for its painting is explained by the difficulty encountered for sittings in regular sequence. A hurried note from the Queen's Secretary, given below, throws light on the situation :

"Monday.

"The Baroness Lehtzen presents her compliments to Mr. Sully and hastens to inform him that her Majesty will give Mr. Sully a sitting at $\frac{1}{2}$ p. 12 to-day.

"The note she had written on Saturday was unfortunately not delivered."

The word "immediate" appears with the address of "Sully, Esq., 46 Gt. Marlborough St."

To a man of methodical habits, it must have proved something of a trial to receive but an hour or two's notice for so important an appointment. Social civilities were not wanting; we find among some Sully family papers an invitation addressed :

"Mr. Sully.

Lady Francis Egerton

At Home

Saturday, March 3rd.

Bridgewater House.

$\frac{1}{2}$ past 10 o'clock.

MEMOIRS OF THOMAS SULLY

Sully when writing to his wife describes this entertainment :

" At eleven I took a cab and was put down at Bridgewater House. You approach it as to Head's Hotel in 3rd Street—it recedes from the street with the same arrangement for carriages. Two servants assisted me out, and the pavement and portico were carpeted. I passed through a regiment of servants to the attiring room, and from thence up the grand stairway—my name traveling before me from attendant to attendant—Ushered into the Reception Room I soon selected the hostess Lady Egerton and made my bow—her reception of me was most cordial and polite. (Mrs. Rogers formerly Miss Fairman will give you some idea of her face, person and manner.) Lord E(gerton) came up and welcomed me, and I then strolled through the rooms to gaze upon the crowd of visitors; and soon discovered that I was rubbing elbows (with) against the nobles of the land! Princes of the blood, Dukes, Duchesses, and Lords in numbers. Now and then Lord E—— would join me and point out some remarkable personages—'That is the Duke of Wellington, those two ladies to your right the Duchess of Cambridge and of Cumberland—Sir Robert Peel, Lord Brougham—Dacres—Duke of Sussex, etc., etc.' During the evening I was frequently pressed close to Wellington and could follow his conversation—His portraits are generally like—but they make him appear too old. There were some beautiful women there, and as there were many, I think, I might venture to give an opinion on the comparative beauty of the females of the two countries and I should decide that in Phila. we surpass them in face, form and grace.

The immense gallery and five other rooms were thrown open and by twelve o'clock I should judge that there were three hundred persons there—I wish I were able to give you a description of the dresses—I thought them gorgeous and becoming, but those of black velvet pleased me most. Feathers, turbans and diamonds in profusion.

Lady E—— frequently engaged me in conversation about Fanny Butler to whom she seems much attached."

An invitation to dine at Bridgewater House followed the attendance at the Reception.

MR. SULLY'S

Company at Dinner

On Monday, March 12, $\frac{1}{4}$ past 7 o'clock."

Of this entertainment Sully writes to his family :

"When about to be seated at the dinner table Lady Egerton called me 'round to her side and I found myself installed between her Ladyship and another fine-looking woman, full of delightful conversation, so that between the two I quite neglected dining." A Mr. Babbage well known to science dined with us—At table Lady E. bent her head close to mine, and said in a mysterious manner: "Perhaps I know more of your movements in London than you dream of"—I thanked her for the honor done me—"I received a note from you addressed to Lady Dacre, and that Lady has received one intended for me—we compared notes and found all was right and I learn you are to dine with them next Saturday!"—One of my usual blunders you perceive in addressing a note to the wrong person.

The Garrick Club opened its doors to the visiting artist, electing him an Honorary Member in December, "for the ensuing three months." *

* On his return to the United States, Sully paid his acknowledgments by painting and presenting a portrait of Edwin Forrest to the Club. The following letter attests the Club's appreciation :

Garrick Club, London,
14 April, 1840.

" Sir :

I am desired by the Committee of the Garrick Club to offer you their best acknowledgments for your very handsome present of a portrait of Mr. Edwin Forrest. They also desire me to express the great gratification you have afforded them of adding to their collection the work of so eminent an artist. I have the honour to be,

Sir,

Your very obedient servant,

W. WINSTON, Sec'y.

To THOS. SULLY, ESQ.

MEMOIRS OF THOMAS SULLY

Apropos of the social side of life, young Sully, in a letter to his father, writes :

"It is a pity Fanny Butler was not in London when you got there, for Blanche's sake, however, she appears to be very well engaged visiting, but might have shared your treat with you amongst the nobility with Fanny's aid."

After completing the head of the Queen, Sully immediately began, and finished shortly, the very beautiful three-quarter or "Bishop's half-length" for Hodgson & Graves, from which a very charming engraving was produced. This portrait now hangs on the walls of Hertford House (Wallace Collection), having been purchased by Lord Hertford at Christie's Auction Rooms in June, 1855.* It bears the distinction of being the single example of the "American School" contained in this justly celebrated collection of pictures and art objects. A copy made from it is said to hang at Windsor Castle.

This three-quarter length portrait evidently came under notice of the Queen, for Richard Hodgson, of the engraving firm, writes from

"6 Pall Mall, Saturday.

"My dear sir :

The Queen was pleased with your picture, but said, 'She expected to have seen you again before you left England,' and if you like even now to postpone your departure, you could, I dare say, see her on Monday, as the picture is to remain at the Palace till Monday; this, however, you must do as you think best; all I shall require is to have the benefit of the autograph until your return, as she declined giving her name by stating that you had it already. . . . I enclose you a letter for Messrs. Goupil of Paris, but unfortunately Mr. Graves has gone home without writing the letter for Brussels, but if you have made up your mind to go there, just let me know, and I will send it to you in Paris, and I am

My dear Sir,

Very Truly Yours,

RICHARD HODGSON.

MEMOIRS OF THOMAS SULLY

P. S.—As the Autograph is really of great importance, pray be so kind as to leave it out and Mr. F. Graves will call for it on Monday morning.

Yrs, R. H."

This refers to the autograph given Sully during the painting of the head portrait.

These two likenesses by Sully of the Queen, viz: the head on a canvas of "kit-cat" size, from life sittings, and the three-quarter length (Bishop's half-length), just described, were the only ones executed in England. The full-length for the St. George's Society was painted at his studio on Fifth Street, Philadelphia, where he began it following his return on September thirtieth, and finished it on January fourteenth, 1839.

Before the Queen's sittings had been arranged for, Sully, en attendant, painted four portraits in London. One of these was the likeness of Samuel Jaudon, at that time representing the United States Bank under its Pennsylvania state charter, in London. He also made copies of the celebrated "Strawberry Girl" and the "Girl and Bird", both after Reynolds, from the originals owned by the poet Rogers.

The three-quarter length portrait of Victoria, painted for Hodgson & Graves, was finished on June twenty-fourth. It is probable, therefore, that the Hodgson letter, referring to the portrait being at Buckingham Palace, was written a few days following that date, and on the eve of Sully's departure for Paris.

In the following month he has crossed over to France and guided by his "Notes" we find him in Paris at the Louvre on July 6th, and commenting as follows: "In my first superficial view of the Louvre I was much impressed with the advantage of good color. I could not avoid being most attracted by Rubens notwithstanding his grossness," and when at the Luxembourg—"The Luxembourg Palace has a gallery where specimens of the best French artists are placed. In these works I found great excellence and even when they fail to please it is not through their deficiency in Art, but too great anxiety to show their knowledge." (!)

MEMOIRS OF THOMAS SULLY

(A shrewd piece of criticism on Sully's part.) "Horace Vernet however rises superior to all trammels. He is a great painter and cultivating as he does the highest walk of Art I consider him according to my experience unrivalled. De La Roche comes next to him but is not so good a colorist. The French artists are accomplished draughtsmen and as every touch of the brush is in a degree drawing, they might be good handlers of paint if they were not so rigid and harsh in their markings."

He is back in London by July 25th and visits Holland House where he notes a very fine portrait of Sterne by Reynolds, adding, "The portrait of Sterne is equal to any portrait I have ever seen by Sir Joshua."

He notes also seeing there the original of "Mrs. Siddons as the Tragic-Muse."

The time of his departure is at hand however and the Comte de Survilliers (Joseph Bonaparte) then in London writes his friend Joseph Hopkinson in Philadelphia under date of July 24th: "I do not want Mr. Sully to leave without telling you that he has had great success in this country" (England).^{*} We think the word "success" means not only artistic success but refers as well to the recognition of his personal qualities. Letters of Blanche and her father to the home circle show the many doors that were opened to them, and the cordial relations invariably established between them and their new-found friends. There was a manly sincerity about Sully, accompanied as it was by great modesty, and a readiness to appreciate the labors of others, that could not fail to attract. We find him on most pleasant terms with the circle of British artists in London, visiting at their studios and interchanging calls.

He speaks in high terms of Sir M. A. Shee's art. Of David Wilkie he writes: "Wilkie charmed me; not more in his simple unaffected kindness of manner than in his noble and exquisite works."†

"Blanche Sully writes her family: "We have just had a visit from ^{*} Joseph Bonaparte had visited and dined him in London.

† Letter to John Neagle dated "London, Nov. 22, 1837."

MEMOIRS OF THOMAS SULLY

Sir David Wilkie, really he is a delightful man ; Jane, I can hardly describe him ; he is a mixture of Walter Scott and Mr. McMurtrie,* not so heavy as the former, nor quite so dignified as the latter—speaks quite Scotch, has eyebrows shaped something like father's, but reddish, sandy hair—no beauty, yet that good quiet look of Scott."

A breakfast with the poet Rogers is mentioned in one of Sully's letters, and of whose house he writes: "a precious mansion every part of which seems stocked with valuable relics of Art, Science and Taste." He dines with John Murray the noted publisher, meeting at his table John Smith of the "Rejected Addresses," described as "an elderly, pale and large gentleman," Thos. Moore and Edward Landseer. . . . "Moore although unwell, showed himself to be that joyous, sparkling mortal, I have always thought him to be ; his wit, his short stories were so pat to the occasion, and the cause of wit in others, that he proved to be the soul of the company." . . . On a later occasion father and daughter dine and pass an evening with the same host, meeting Lockhart. Blanche writes of it: "Went to Mr. Murray's to dine, there we had the honor of meeting the Mr. Lockhart. It was some time before I could realize it for I had pictured Mr. L. rather an old man but he is youngish and somewhat handsome, very entertaining, and of course highly intellectual."

With these glimpses of the wide social intercourse enjoyed by Blanche and her father during their London sojourn, we bring this portion of our story to an end.

The homeward voyage was undertaken in the early part of August, and we shall find Sully returned and at work in his studio in Philadelphia at the end of September, where, from the life studies made of the Queen, he began his full-length portrait of her on September thirtieth, 1838. Before its completion, a misunderstanding arose between the Society and

*James McMurtrie (1784-1854), an early patron of Art residing in Philadelphia. On intimate terms with the artist Henry Inman.

MEMOIRS OF THOMAS SULLY

Mr. Sully. The former took the ground that their ownership in the portrait of Queen Victoria was of such a nature that the artist was precluded from exhibiting it before delivery, or of painting any second picture of a similar character. To this view Mr. Sully strenuously objected. The question had been raised from the circumstance that, when visiting our artist's studio, the Committee from the St. George's Society had found there a replica of the full-length picture under way, and which Mr. Sully frankly stated was for his own use. The upshot of this state of things was the bringing of a bill by the Society, praying the Supreme Court to issue an injunction to restrain any exhibition of their portrait before its delivery, and to prevent any replica being made of it. Following the granting of a preliminary injunction, Mr. Sully's answer and motion for a dissolution of the injunction was duly filed. In his answer he maintained that he was not going beyond his rights, according to the received custom of artists, both in Philadelphia and elsewhere. Before the motion was argued, and by agreement of counsel, the question involved in the Bill and Answer were submitted for arbitration and settlement to three of the most distinguished members of the Bar of Philadelphia: the gentlemen chosen being Messrs. Horace Binney, William Rawle and Thomas I. Wharton.

After an examination of witnesses and argument by counsel on both sides, Messrs. Binney and Rawle signed an award, in which they found in favor of Mr. Sully on the question of his right to paint and retain a replica of the Queen's portrait.* The right to exhibit before delivery was not passed upon. That the artist was free from any mercenary motive is clearly shown by the fact that not long afterwards the replica he painted was presented by himself to the St. Andrew's Society of Charleston, S. C., in recognition of civilities, etc., shown him. Curiously enough, while the valuation of the London three-quarter length portrait is put down in his Register at $1,000,* as also the one painted for the St. George's Society, these being the figures he obtained, the portrait forwarded to the Charleston Society is entered at a valuation of $2,000. It seems to us that Sully's revised valuation was much nearer the mark.

* Mr. Thomas I. Wharton filed a dissenting opinion, holding that while the artist had a right to retain his studies and sketches with freedom to use or dispose of them, he did not think that the said artist had the right "to combine them so as to assume exactly the same figure without infringing the rights of the owners of the original."

* The portrait painted for the St. George's Society was exhibited soon after by the Society in New York, Boston, Montreal, Quebec, New Orleans, etc., producing a considerable revenue for the charitable funds of the organization.

CHAPTER IX

SOME REFLECTIONS ON SULLY'S GENIUS—RESIGNS FROM DIRECTORATE OF PENNSYLVANIA ACADEMY OF FINE ARTS—DECLINES PRESIDENCY OF ARTIST'S FUND SOCIETY—ELECTED PRESIDENT OF PENNSYLVANIA ACADEMY OF FINE ARTS; DECLINES ACCEPTING HONOR—AS TO HIS EARNINGS—LETTER TO ALFRED SULLY—CORRESPONDENCE WITH PROFESSOR PORCHER OF CHARLESTON, S. C.

IT has been hinted at by the writer of an earlier biographical notice that while Thomas Sully's career was not precisely meteoric in character, nevertheless that his genius suffered an eclipse after the lapse of something like twenty years. How so distorted a view could be adopted we are at a loss to understand. It is true that some of his best brush work was done following his return from England in 1810, but on the other hand he is found producing portraits of the highest merit, following his second visit in 1837-38. His prestige was probably as great in the years between 1830 and 1840 as in any period of his career; and that this fame was well deserved, the canvasses dating from that decade are eloquent proof. Our judgment is that for a period of thirty years at least his powers remained undiminished; and that after that length of time, the change was so gradual that portraits coming from his hand continued to possess a charm of coloring and a grace of outline, distinguishing them unmistakably from contemporaneous canvasses.

Portraits painted in 1857, when Sully was entering his 75th year, exhibit much of his former art—desirable portraits still—and five years later (!) he is sought to paint likenesses of childhood and youth. For an artist to be singled out at 80 years of age by people of culture and means to paint likenesses of their children is as remarkable as it is rare.

MEMOIRS OF THOMAS SULLY

With advancing years it is evident that our artist sought to concentrate his energies on the single pursuit of his art. In 1831, after fifteen years' service as a Director of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, he tenders his resignation. A very flattering request from its President to continue on the Board he feels constrained to decline.*

In 1834 we find his son-in-law, John Neagle, urging him very strongly to head a newly-formed association of artists, afterwards known as the "Artists' Fund Society." Neagle writes to Sully:

" . . . The reputation which you have so deservedly acquired at the summit of professional excellence fully authorizes my solicitation, and I trust that it will not be denied. . . . I am aware of your disinclination to mingle with the business transactions of a society, but what we desire is the influence of your name and approbation, not undivided attention to the ordinary duties and drudgery of office."

Gratifying, doubtless, as were these evidences of confidence and regard, Sully is not swerved from his determination when once formed. The wording of his reply to his son-in-law we can only surmise, but that he was prompt (as usual) in acting on a decision arrived at an endorsement on the Neagle letter illustrates:

"J. Neagle, Esq., on subject of Association of Artists, Septr. 7th, 1834. Answered Septr. 7th."

It is possible that Sully in his reply may have suggested or even urged Neagle to take upon himself the reins of office. At any rate, that is what occurred, for in the following year at the establishment of the "Artists' Fund Society" we find John Neagle occupying the office of President. He remained at its head for eight years (1835-1843). That Sully was prudent in his resolve was justified by after events; for, less than two years following the formation of the Society there was a bitter quarrel between a contentious member and the recently elected President.

Another invitation, however, to assume important official duties was still in store for Sully. In 1842, following the death of Joseph Hopkinson, who had long served the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts as its distinguished President, that body proceeded to elect Thomas Sully to the vacant office. Sully, when declining the honor—expressed in very graceful terms—adverted to his resolution “to avoid all situations of official rank.” *

A reference to Sully's supposed gains during his long career seems appropriate at this point.

Elsewhere it has been advanced that, based upon a supposed sum total received, he had enjoyed an average annual income of something over $3500, which the writer of the article concludes to have been “a very comfortable income for the greater part of his life, during the period he lived.” A careful examination of Sully's entries in his “Account of Pictures” proves the foregoing calculation to have been founded upon the valuations placed by the artist himself upon his canvasses; and not, it is to be observed, on the actual receipts in payment therefor. An illustration or two will make this clear. In the year of his painting Queen Victoria, he enters a valuation of five hundred dollars ($500) for the portrait (head size) painted at Buckingham Palace, and of two thousand dollars ($2000) for the full-length replica of the picture painted for the St. George's Society. In neither instance did he receive any money for these paintings. The first mentioned portrait of the Queen he kept during his entire lifetime. It is the one inherited by his daughter, Mrs. Darley, and now hanging in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York City. As to the larger picture, valued at two thousand dollars, he presented this later to the St. Andrews' Society of Charleston, S. C. An earlier instance is the portrait of General Lafayette, which we have shown to have been valued at six hundred dollars ($600) by the artist (a most moderate valuation) and for which he never appears to have been paid more than two hundred and fifty ($250) dollars.

Sully kept a separate book to which he invariably referred, for "Cash received." Unfortunately this book has not been preserved; at least we do not know of its whereabouts, if it is still intact. We are, however, fully convinced, from the system he followed, that a very considerable reduction should be made in the estimated grand total of his actual earnings. Following the valuation figures as has been done in the estimate made by the writer previously referred to, these amounted to nearly $247,000 (two hundred and forty-seven thousand dollars); a resultant average annual income of $3500. We believe this estimate much beyond the actual facts, when the method of calculation is looked into.

One thing, however, stands out clearly on the record, and that is our artist's indefatigable industry. Our catalogue numbers 2600 works of all kinds, or an average of 37 for each year that he painted. Had Thomas Sully in the United States received anything like the remuneration for his art which Sir Thomas Lawrence did at the same period in England,* he would beyond a doubt have accumulated a handsome competence for his declining years. As it was, even with all his industry and careful living there was little left to be set aside "for a rainy day." A letter written in 1843 to his son Alfred, then serving as Lieutenant (U. S. A.) and stationed at Sackett's Harbor, N. Y., reveals something of this:

"I will give you a general account of how I stand at present, from which you will perceive that with all my management, I shall only be able to save a small pittance for your sisters when I die; but they will have to depend chiefly on their own industry for support." He goes on to speak of certain losses through bank failures, amounting to five thousand ($5000) dollars, mentions having loaned out $6500 (sixty-five hundred dollars) through Henry Darley, "returnable next November with interest," and then follows: "I have an insurance on my life for one thousand dollars and property in paintings at least worth one more. Thus you are in possession of all my expectations." He is able to add, however, "In the meantime I owe not one dollar, and have a few hundred lying in the bank for any exigence. Add to these good things the blessings of excellent health and troops of friends, and I think I have no right to complain. At your time of life this statement is due. When I go, your sisters will depend on you and your brother (Thomas, Jr.) for advice and confidences, and I feel confident that they will not be disappointed."

* As early as 1806 Lawrence was paid 50 guineas—$250 for his small (head-size) portraits; in 1810 his price was 100 guineas—$500. In 1820 (ten years previous to his death) this figure was advanced to 200 guineas—$1000. His price for larger portraits rose in proportion: £420 for a half-length, £630 for a full length. Lord Gower paid Lawrence 1500 guineas for his fine portrait of his wife and child, and 600 guineas was paid by Lord Durham for his portrait of Master Lambton.

What a charming picture of the affectionate relations existing between father and son! Sully's domestic circle was a never-failing source of affectionate concern to him, and its members always appear to have been bound together by ties of warmest sympathy.

During his long life he was to suffer many bereavements—at times following close upon each other. In 1845 died his step-daughter Mary Chester Sully, who had married John Neagle the artist in 1826. Sully was much attached to her, as also to her children. She is often mentioned under the pet-name of "Moggy." A harder blow followed in 1847 when both his son Thomas Wilcocks (usually spoken of as Thomas Sully, Jr.) and a daughter Rosalie Kemble passed away within a few months of each other.

The letter which follows was written the year following these mournful events, and there is a reference to them.* We are introducing it however more particularly as picturing the later period of Sully's life; it reflects his outlook on life at that time, and exhibits his amiability of character. There are touches of humor, and a very natural outburst of indignation at the close, for what he rated a mean performance. The letter is evidently written to his brother-in-law, Prof. Porcher of S. C., married to his sister Harriet, and who were living at Charleston, S. C.

I am now seated at our round table with the women-folk who are sewing and of course talking; so if I make some blunders in this letter you will make due allowance.

Sweep your chimnies.

I suppose you have insured your house? but are you aware that if your house was burnt by the chimney taking fire, and it was ascertained that you had not caused it to be cleaned at the lawful time you would forfeit your insurance? Your letter came to us yesterday. We should have been very anxious about you but that we occasionally heard of you by one of our neighbors, who corresponds with Miss Cheesborough of your city. I would have written but as Walter Scott says, "I am like a ghost who always waits to be spoken to first."

. . . You mention an unpleasant winter. We have had the warmest weather that has been known for 20 years, and it is feared that ice will be scarce next summer.*

Pray don't plague yourself with the Harper money. I have long ago made up my mind to give it up. I wish it were all that I have lost. It sometimes vexes me to think that I have worked for every dollar that I claim and have been defrauded of upwards of Ten thousand Dollars.† I have been desirous of making enough for old age or infirmity, but that is out of the question now. My present hope is to earn enough to leave the female part of my family enough with care and a little industry on their part to "keep the wolf from the door," and one or two successful winters would enable me to do so. I could not leave home this last winter, the family were too depressed by our recent loss.‡ I am encouraged to visit Savannah next winter. But I will not determine until next summer is over.

We will send you our copy of Capt. Henry's Mexico, by the first conveyance.

What a contrast the last winter must have been to Mrs. Chadwick when compared to the one previously passed in Europe! It must have been dull, particularly so to Henry. Yet, notwithstanding all the fine things which books and travelers tell of foreign parts; there are pains, anxieties and inconveniences not put down in the account which would quite balance the pleasure. Henceforth, I shall be satisfied to hear, and read of travels.

Mr. and Mrs. Wake are delightful people, especially Mrs. Wake. Please give Blanch's and my sincere regards to them.

Mrs. Gilman * has dedicated the second volume of her late work to me, and an order to her bookseller in N. Y. to deliver it to me; but Felix Darley who presented the order, has brought me home the first volume. But I will soon have it changed.

You ask me my plans for the coming Summer. In June, I have promised to visit Providence for the purpose of varnishing the pictures I painted there last year. I will endeavor to take Blanch with me. If I am employed I may remain there during the warm weather. I have lately received a letter from Yale College of New Haven to know my prices, as they desire to have a portrait of one of their Professors. If they conclude to select me as the painter, I shall go there after a short visit to Providence. I must seek for business this coming summer, as [the] last year has been a very expensive one. By the way, I have paid all the debts of poor Tom that I could hear of.

Alfred is yet in Burlington recruiting Soldiers for the Army. But as we are to have peace † (thank God) he will perhaps be ordered to some garrison fort as he was fixed formerly, but in what part of the country I cannot guess. He is in good health and as his expenses are but light, he is enabled to save money, and has remitted to me from time to time $500, which I have invested for him. All this I believe is greatly owing to Jane, who has perseveringly prayed him to save money. If he continues in this practice he will eventually provide against a "rainy day."

Blanch is not so strong to take long walks as she used to be, but except for a touch of indigestion, her health is good. She is at present much taken up with a young friend of hers who is about to be married, Martha Berg, the only daughter of a most amiable woman, that we have long been acquainted with, who has all her life struggled with poverty. The gentleman whom she is engaged to is an excellent man, and very rich, so that at least one evil will be put away.

Sally as usual continues ministering to the wants of others and fidgeting at home. I think Sarah (Mrs. Sully) has become still more anxious for the comfort of animals. The notice that a dog or horse is ill-treated in the neighborhood will quite destroy her tranquility. Jane has lately been called upon to take some portraits. She is always ready to receive an order to paint. I think she paints better than she ever did, perhaps it may be because her health is firmer. Darley battles along but no doubt he has plenty of difficulty.

Chip has grown to 5 ft. 5½ inches (remember that 5 ft. 9 inches is the common height of personable men). He is but little over 12 years. . . . He seems to have much talent for music, no doubt will be a professional musician. . . .*

So Chester has removed to New Orleans! It will give him a better field for industry and adventure, but will the summer suit his family? We are pleased and surprised that Annita is about to be married. I hope it may be a proper match. . . . Has Fraser told you how Mr. Saunders, the miniature painter, has mended? . . .

We hear regularly from Wheeler,† and all things go on prosperously with them. We expect a visit from them next summer.

The lease of Mr. Earle's house has expired and he has determined to give up business and retire. Of course he will sell off his stock next April and I intend to sell all the pictures I have in his Gallery.

Dr. Hewson is dead. He has been our physician and good friend these thirty years.

The landlord of the property adjoining my painting-window had given leave to his tenant to build against me; which would have destroyed my light and would have obliged me to move. On my expostulating with him on the subject he has requested his tenant to construct the building a few feet to the left, it being a matter of perfect indifference to them where it should be constructed on the premises, but the landlord, Mr. Sheaf, bargained with me that I should for that accommodation paint his portrait.* I have long been persuaded from experience that the world in which we live is made up of a few just men, a portion also of Fools and the balance of knaves who prey upon the fools.

The usual quiet of our city has been broken in upon by the visit of Mr. Clay and the funeral of Adams.† Dr. Chapman, a notorious punster as well as an excellent physician, was deputed to be with Clay on the day of his reception of Ladies' visits. CONCLUSION

WHEN beginning this biography, we expressed the view that the period lending itself best to description was from the outset of Sully's active career as a portrait painter, and for the next succeeding forty years. We have endeavored to trace as faithfully as possible (allowing for the distance of time) the events of those years. The reader, we feel convinced, will realize as we do, that it was through no adventitious aid that Thomas Sully achieved his high reputation. Writing to his son Alfred, who afterwards rose to prominent military rank, he remarks, "How true it is that we make our own fortunes; talent, money, nothing will do without regular habits and industry; these my dear boy you have and I have no fear on your account". When speaking of a fellow artist of acknowledged genius, he notes that he was "Capricious, and never would paint unless he was in the humor, although the way is to begin and the humor will come afterwards". The cardinal principles of industry and punctuality were so ingrained in Sully's nature that sitters coming to him were not put off or disappointed as so often happens, perhaps especially when the Artist has gained great celebrity. We read of Sir Thomas Lawrence's procrastinations and Gilbert Stuart's delays. Not so with Sully; a promise made or an engagement entered into is to be fulfilled at all costs. The integrity of the man is on a level with his genius; and as a consequence, he rings true at every stage of his career. While surviving to a great age, Sully was spared many of the bodily infirmities that usually accompany it. He had always been of an active habit and continued to take regular walks down to a very late period of his life. Tuckerman* describes a visit paid him at his Studio not many years previous to his decease: "The veteran was found working diligently at his Easel.* During a half-hour's conversation, Mr. Sully exhibited a wonderful richness of anecdote and observation, nor did his memory seem to be seriously impaired."

A gentleman,† still living in our midst, has recently put on record his recollections of the Artist, his home, and family circle. Naturally these recollections deal with Mr. Sully's later years. When referring to his painting room and the preparation of colors, for which the artist was noted, he remarks: "Now this implied labor, manual labor, involving the expenditure of considerable energy; and I remember that the work required in the preparation of white was especially arduous because Mr. Sully in his advanced years while preparing other colors gave up making white because of his failing strength". Continuing he narrates, "Mr. Sully always delightful in any society was especially charming in his Studio. To be with him in his Studio, when he was not at work and was in a talking mood was a rare privilege. He was full of recollections of the great men of the early days of our land." Here we find the capacity for social intercourse still happily preserved, following a full use of all the faculties. The same gentleman goes on to comment on Sully's tastes, and in passing notes his inability to appreciate Milton. "He simply could not enjoy Milton, and being one of the most honest men who ever lived he could not pretend to enjoy the sublime poet." Sully is in good company on this point. In a book describing "Some Aspects of Thackeray," by Lewis Melville, we read: "For instance while as a matter of course he (Thackeray) admitted that Milton was a great poet he added that 'he was such a bore that no one could read him' (!). What makes the comparison particularly applicable in this case is that the author of the book referred to exclaims as does Mr. Sully's biographer, "Whatever one may think of the discernment of a man who says that, it is impossible to doubt his honesty."

The writer of this memoir can very distinctly recall Mr. Sully accompanied by his ever faithful Blanche, walking about the streets of our city. This was about 1861-62—ten years before his decease, but he was even then almost an octogenarian (born in 1783). The description of his appearance at that time given by Mr. Budd in his very charming address already cited: "Wearing his well-known great coat with large fur cuffs and collar, and always wearing a high silk hat" fits precisely with the writer's recollection. Although but a boy at the time, there remains very vividly with him, the memory of a spare, slightly stooping yet dignified figure, costumed as just described, with a woman of sprightly mien (Blanche Sully) hovering protectingly by his side.

Mrs. Sully pre-deceased her husband by a little over five years, so that towards the last it was Blanche who ministered to her father. Any memorial of the Artist must include mention of that bright spirit who accompanied him so unflinching through life. Less endowed apparently than the other members of the family with a capacity for Art,* her interests and affections seem always to have centered on her father. Early in life we find her the companion of his accustomed rambles afoot. Afterwards she accompanied him to England and proved herself of the greatest service to the Artist in his new surroundings. Always at her father's side, she shares his sorrows and his joys, finally becoming the comfort and solace of his declining years. She was the apple of his eye and merited the affection he always felt for her. When the parting came, the separation must have meant much to gentle Blanche. She survived her father twenty-six years, living down to 1898, when at the age of eighty-four she also passed away.

We have already related how Sully was left in undisturbed possession of Girard's house in Fifth Street above Chestnut Street, and where he lived continuously for something like forty-five years. Here his death occurred on November 5th, 1872. The obsequies were conducted from the house, and a description of the closing scene is given by one who was present and entered an account of it in his diary: "November 9th—went to Mr. Sully's funeral. It had originally been intended that it should be strictly private, but it seems that it was not possible to keep it perfectly quiet and accordingly quite a number came to the house. Very few, however, went to the grounds, probably only the invited ones. The old Gentleman was laid out in his painting room. It seemed peculiarly fitting that he should be. From what other place should he start for his last earthly home? The suffering he had been through had left some marks upon his face, but, on the whole, he seemed calm as he lay there surrounded by his utensils, the picture half finished on the easel, where he had probably left it when he became unable to paint more. Dear old Man, he is gone, a perfect gentleman, a thoroughly pure, good, noble man".*

Not long ago the writer of this biography, on a summer's day, entered the main gates of the cemetery at Laurel Hill and made his way to where lie so many of the Sully name. A very simple head-stone marks the resting place of the Artist and his wife, while all about them are the graves of their children. The burial lot is situated at about the center of the main cemetery† on slightly rising ground, with open views on all sides. It is indeed a "beautiful resting place," as some one writing of it has remarked, and its unpretentious character throughout makes a strong appeal to the feelings. As the writer moved about among the simple headstones and read their inscriptions, the spirit of the united affections of those lying beneath seemed to hover about the place and make it doubly sacred.

*This mention is made in Mr. Budd's printed address on Thomas Sully. We are inclined to think from its sympathetic tone that Mr. Budd himself may have been the writer in the diary mentioned.

MEMOIRS OF THOMAS SULLY

It is something of a reproach that here in Philadelphia no memorial to Thomas Sully's memory of a public character seems ever to have been proposed. Recently a tablet commemorating Gilbert Stuart's genius on the site of his former studio, has been placed on the Drexel Building at Fifth and Chestnut Streets. If eulogistic mention of Thomas Sully's name were to be similarly placed, close to the site of his former home and studio at Fifth and Ranstead Streets, it would seem highly appropriate. Boston has her "Copley Square," and we believe a street named after Gilbert Stuart, although where his ashes lie, alas! is veiled in doubt. In our own city there is nothing to commemorate in a public manner the name of an Artist, so justly celebrated, and so universally identified with Philadelphia, as that of Thomas Sully.

FOREWORD

THE Historical Society of Pennsylvania owns the original autograph list of the paintings by Thomas Sully, written throughout in his minute, painstaking handwriting. It includes most of his portraits painted on canvas and panel, his miniatures on ivory, and numerous subject paintings and many sketches. This register is now for the first time fully published, together with the description of a number of his portraits hitherto unrecorded. Sully for some unexplainable reason failed to note a number of his portraits in his register, and these omissions have taken away to some extent the value of the original list as an authority, or as a means of identification of his work ; therefore a more complete catalogue of his work has been required by the student of American painting.

In describing the painting "head to left" or "right" it is meant that the head of the subject is turned to the left or right of the person viewing the picture. Wherever possible, the original paintings have been consulted for the description and measurements. The artist notes in his list of paintings the standard sizes of the canvases used. These sizes are in inches, Head 17" by 20"; Bust 20" by 24" ; Half-length 25" by 30" ; Kit-Cat 20" by 36" ; Three-quarter length 40" by 50" ; Bishop's half length 44" by 56" ; Whole length 68" by 94". There are variations in the sizes of canvases and in the placing of the portrait upon the canvas, but the above are the standard sizes and descriptions of life-portraits. Sully signed his paintings with his monogram TS and the date, either in an inconspicuous manner on the face of his picture or on the back of the canvas.

Sully notes in his register of paintings the dates, and under each year he records the month and day he started the work, the words "Begun" and "Finished" showing the length of time occupied by the work. He also notes the price, date, and in some cases where the painting was a present or gift this represents the valuation he set at that time on his work. Where he introduced the hands of the sitter his price was often increased, and he notes it in the register, as well as some note or description of the sitter, family connection, or place of residence. As a means of identification and interest in the work, the authors have added wherever possible, biographical information of the sitter and the present ownership of the paintings. Owing to the Artist's high reputation and great industry he has left us many portraits of well-known people; in the City of Philadelphia his list of sitters might well be called "The Blue Book" of that day. It is gratifying to find at this time so many of the portraits he painted still in the hands of the families and descendants of the original owners, although the study of American painting has drawn many of the best portraits of Stuart and Sully into public galleries and collections.

At the conclusion of their labors, the authors desire to express their hearty appreciation of the aid and assistance rendered to them throughout the progress of their work by many eminent authorities on American painting, in addition to the invariable consideration and ready cooperation of the present owners of the paintings of Thomas Sully.

American poet and novelist. Size about 7" × 10". Signed "TS" on panel.

Picture was owned by I. W. Heysinger, M. D., of Philadelphia, from whose possession it passed to Alfred Percival Smith, Esq., of Philadelphia.

NOTE BY DR. H.—This portrait of Edgar Allen Poe was painted by Thomas Sully in 1839 or 1840, while Poe was residing in Philadelphia. George R. Bonfield, the artist, was well acquainted with both Poe and Sully. All three attended social meetings of artists, actors, writers, etc., in the Old Falstaff Hotel, 6th St. above Chestnut, Phila. John Sartain was also a participant. It was the fashion at this time to call Poe the American Byron, and Murray's Child Harold edition had recently appeared (see Byron portrait), and Sully posed him, for his own pleasure, in the Byron attitude, modified by Poe's dress. James McMurtrie furnished the cloak. John Sartain says of Poe at page 215 of his "Recollections", "Poe's face was handsome. Although his forehead when seen in profile showed a receding line from the brow up, viewed from the front it presented a broad and noble expanse, very large at and above the temples. His lips were thin and delicately moulded."

This picture alone shows these features. It is strikingly like the sketch of his mother, as shown in Joyce's "Edgar Allen Poe", page 6. Poe wore no mustache at that time, as shown in Sully's picture.

I. LETTERS

MAY 30, 1831.

Dear Sir :

At the last meeting of the Directors of the Penna. Academy of the Fine Arts I presented your letter tendering your resignation as a Member of the Board. Altho' we are unwilling to press upon you a continuance of your services to the Academy at the expense of your own convenience and wishes, we hope you will consent to a postponement of your retirement from office, at least for another year. The organization of the schools and the arrangements to be put in operation during the ensuing year, will render your knowledge and experience peculiarly important to us. I am therefore directed by the unanimous desire of the Board to ask your assent to be put on the ticket for Directors at the approaching election.

Very Truly & Respectfully

Yr. very obed. Servant

JOS. HOPKINSON.

T. SULLY, Esq.

(Sully's Answer to Mr. Hopkinson on back of letter.)

MAY 31.

HON. JUDGE HOPKINSON.

My dear Sir :

Since it was after mature deliberation that I determined upon resigning my place on the Board of Directors of the Academy of Fine Arts, I would by no means be dissuaded from this step at the present juncture.

APPENDIX

My engagements at Boston will oblige me to leave home by the middle of June, and will detain me until late in the Fall ; so that at all events I should be precluded from rendering any assistance in the arrangements to be made in the schools of the Academy, but I am fully persuaded that I could not offer a single idea to improve the views already embraced on the subject.

I consider the reluctance of the Board to accept my resignation as a testimonial of their friendly feelings towards me, for which I beg through you to make them my grateful acknowledgments.

With sincere esteem,
Your obt. Servt

PENNSYLVANIA ACADEMY OF FINE ARTS.

PHILADA : FEBRUARY 9TH, 1842.

Dear Sir :

At a stated meeting of the Board of Directors held on Wednesday Evening the 9th Inst.; you were elected a Director of the Academy, and immediately afterwards you were Elected President of the Academy in the place of the late Judge Hopkinson.

Very respectfully yours,
F'RA HOPKINSON, Secy.

MR. THOMAS SULLY.

PHILADELPHIA,
16TH FEBRUARY 1842

THOMAS SULLY, ESQR.

Dear Sir :

You have no doubt long ere this heard of the death of our much lamented fellow citizen Joseph Hopkinson Esquire, late President of the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts, who departed this life on the 5th of January last.

APPENDIX

In his death that institution has met with a very serious loss, for since its first establishment, he upon every occasion exercised a most active and untiring zeal in furtherance of its best interests.

The directors of the Academy on whom it devolves to fill the vacancy made by the death of their highly esteemed late President, held a special meeting on the evening of the 10th inst. for that purpose, when you were unanimously chosen to fill that station, and in accordance with the following Resolution we take pleasure in communicating the same to you.

RESOLVED, that Charles Graff, Hyman Gratz and Thomas C. Rockhill be a Committee to inform Thomas Sully, Esq. of his election as President of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts.

We are with great regard and esteem,

Dear Sir, Your m. obedt. St.

CHARLES GRAFF

HYMAN GRATZ

T. C. ROCKHILL

(Answer.)

To Messrs.

C. GRAFF

H. GRATZ

T. C. ROCKHILL,

Gentlemen :

I am greatly impressed with the honor conferred upon me by the Directors of the Academy of the Fine Arts in electing me President of the Institution ; particularly so when I consider the talents and high standing of our late friend Joseph Hopkinson Esquire whose vacated place I was expected to fill.

Yet I am constrained to decline the distinction you have proffered me ; I have long since resolved to avoid all situations of official rank, and especially one of such responsibility as that in question.

APPENDIX

With heart felt thanks for the favor you have done me, and in confidence of still possessing your friendly regard,

I am with great respect

Gentlemen,

Yr Friend &

Feby. 22.

II. "CAPUCHIN CHAPEL"

It is related that in July of the year 1821, Sully first became personally acquainted with Washington Allston.

Portrait painting being temporarily under an eclipse, it was suggested by Allston that a well executed copy of Granet's picture of the "Capuchin Chapel" (the choir of the Capuchin Monastery in the Piazza Barberini at Rome. Painted by François Marius Granet), at that time owned by a wealthy Bostonian, might prove profitable as an exhibition picture. Permission having been gained from the owner of the picture, Sully at once set about executing a copy. His indefatigable industry is again emphasized, when we find him completing the picture in two months' time, after brother artists had expressed the view that it would take very much longer. Allston allowed five months for its completion, while Gilbert Stuart predicted it would involve six months' labor.

The entry in Sully's "Account of Pictures" shows that he began it on "Aug. 7" and finished it "Oct. 9", or in just about two months. It was a large canvas, measuring 5 ft. 8 in. by 4 ft. 3 in. An anecdote is related that when he informed Allston of its completion, the latter remarked, "You have made a sketch." "No; a carefully finished copy—come and see."

APPENDIX

That it must have been well executed and a spirited reproduction of the original, there is evidence in correspondence, which the writer has been fortunate in having had access to. In the Hopkinson (MSS) Collection, letters are extant referring to the picture and its ultimate history. Under date of July 7, 1825, the Hon. Joel R. Poinsett writes from Mexico City to Judge Joseph Hopkinson, in Philadelphia :

"I saw a bad copy of the 'Capuchin Chapel' in the cabinet of the Bishop of Puebla; it cost him an enormous sum. If Mr. Sully thinks the public curiosity exhausted in the United States, and will send me his copy, I will hang it in my house and sell it for him if I can get the price he shall fix upon it."

To which Judge Hopkinson replied under date of September 27, 1825 :

"Mr. Sully is very grateful for your thinking so kindly of him, the copy of the 'Capuchin Chapel' produces from $120 to $150 dollars a year;* and it would be imprudent to part with it. On my suggestion, however, he will make another copy equally good, and send it to you. It will be ready for some vessel in the Spring."

Then, on December 27, 1825, Sully himself writes Mr. Poinsett :

"Our mutual friend, Mr. Hopkinson, read to me a passage in one of your letters to him last Fall, in which you kindly invited me to adventure in your charge the sale of my picture of the 'Capuchin Chapel.' I promptly replied to the message from you, but find that the vessel I wrote by has been lost at sea. I would now assure you that I intend to send the picture to you by the first spring ship ; at the same time will also send one or two other subjects with the limit price attached." In accepting your benevolent invitation, I am fully sensible of your kind intention and hope my feelings of grateful acknowledgment will be acceptable to you."

* Sully's copy of the "Capuchin Chapel" was brought to Norfolk. It received in two weeks' exhibition upwards of $200." Under date of March, 1822, in Dunlap's Autobiography, p. 540.

APPENDIX

From the foregoing, it would appear that Sully decided to send the picture he had been exhibiting, rather than delay matters by executing a second copy, as suggested by Mr. Hopkinson.*

Under date of October 20, 1826, Mr. Poinsett writes Judge Hopkinson :

"I enclose you a letter for Mr. Sully, which I will thank you to deliver to him. I have chosen this channel because the letter contains an order for $500. I sold his picture for $550. The expenses of carriage rather exceeded $50."

This is confirmed by Sully himself, who addresses "His Excellency Joel R. Poinsett, Minister of U. S. to Mexico" from Philadelphia, February 27, 1827 :

"I have received the draft you sent me for Five hundred dollars, some months ago by the hand of Mr. Hopkinson. I took it for granted he would tell you so in his next communication. I have since received the duplicate and your kind letter, which obliges me to feel ashamed of my remissness. I am well satisfied to learn that the 'Capuchin Chapel' has come safe to hand."

The language of this last paragraph raises a doubt whether the picture reported sold by Mr. Poinsett under date of October 20, 1826, refers to the canvas under discussion or a different one. It is possible that the "Capuchin Chapel" might have been purchased and paid for before arrival, in consideration of Mr. Poinsett's responsibility. But that the picture did sell and found a home in Mexico is clearly proven by the following letter from Sully, which we give in full :

* July 8th, 1826. "Finished the retouching of copy of 'Capuchin Chapel,' $100, 5' 8" × 4' 2"." From Sully's own "Account of Pictures." This was probably preparatory to shipping it to Mexico.

APPENDIX

"PHILADELPHIA, APRIL 20TH, 1828.

"HON'L' J POINSETT,
Minister of U. S. in Mexico.

Dear Sir:

I received yesterday by the hand of Mr. Vaughan your letter of February 23rd, inclosing a draft on the Govt. for $500 as part payment of the sale of 'Capuchin Chapel.'

The amount is beyond my expectations and our obligation to you very great for the trouble you have so kindly undertaken ; indeed the reflection of having taken up so much of your valuable time is the only alloy to the pleasure I have received in the termination of the business.

You will be pleased to hear that the Arts follow in the train of success and encouragement that has lately been given to every branch of industry in the U. S. I am persuaded that it only requires the aid of wealth and fashion to prove that the Fine Arts is one strong point of character in the people of this country.

I am, dear Sir, with high esteem and gratitude,

Yr. friend and Ob't servant,

T. S."

The close of this letter shows Sully in happy and optimistic mood, as he had every reason to be.

IV. SULLY'S "HINTS"

Hints to Young Portrait Painters
And the Process of Portrait Painting
As practiced by the late
Thomas Sully

J. M. Stoddart & Co.

Phila., 1873

PREFACE

These "Hints to Young Painters" were prepared for the press by the late Thomas Sully in the year 1851, and revised by him in 1871, but were not during his lifetime placed in the hands of any publisher. Their merit lies in their brevity and clearness, and they are addressed especially to young artists, who will find in them much useful information. Knowing the deep interest that was felt by the profession in every word spoken or written by the artist, it has been deemed best to add a few notes on the preparation of canvas and vehicles, gleaned from his memoirs. This will interest the accomplished professor as well as the inexperienced amateur and may prove of service to both.

FRANCIS THOMAS SULLY DARLEY.

December, 1872.

NOTE.—The authors note the above-mentioned brochure as containing valuable suggestions for the guidance of young artists. It also contains a colored reproduction of the setting of Sully's palette.
